Moving Rothko

Fighting to Save the Headstone of a Major Abstract Expressionist

By Dan Rattiner

One of the great American painters of the 20th century was Mark Rothko. Like many others, such as de Kooning, Pollock and Gottlieb, he is buried here on the East End.

Now members of his family, 38 years after his death, want to have his grave dug up and his remains moved to Westchester.

This would not be so important, if, say, Rothko were buried in East Hampton or Springs, where almost all the greats are buried. But he happens to be buried on the North Fork, specifically in a quiet little hamlet called East Marion, and his burial site is both a tourist attraction and a compliment to that quiet community. He was buried there because he loved East Marion, the people say. And East Marion wants him to stay. And that could happen, because Rothko's heirs need a court order to move him.

Rothko was born in 1903 in Latvia, which at that time was part of Czarist Russia. His father was the town pharmacist in the village of Daugavpils, and although the Jews in that community were not persecuted as they were in many other parts of Russia, the stories about persecution were not lost on Rothko's dad.

Dan Rattiner is the founder of Dan's Papers. His memoir, In the Hamptons: Fifty Years With Farmers, Fishermen, Artists, Billionaires and Celebrities will be published by Harmony Books this May.

In 1913, he and his wife and their two children took a steamship to New York City, where they settled.

Mark Rothko grew up as a brilliant yet troubled young man. He received a scholarship to Yale because he had the highest grades in his high school, but he didn't fit in there, and left after his second year, largely because Yale didn't like Jews and cancelled his scholarship after his first year. Rosko paid for his second year by doing menial jobs.

Rothko then embarked on a career as a painter, or more properly, a starving artist working with paints. He moved to Manhattan's Upper West Side where he made his studio and held many odd jobs, while he studied at the Art Student's League under Max Weber, and then along with Adolph Gottleib, Ilya Bolotowski, Ben-Zion, Lou Harris and others, apprenticed under Milton Avery.

Rothko came of age during the Great Depression. He married a girl named Edith in 1932 but it was a troubled relationship that finally came to an end in 1943. There were no children. He then went through many different periods with his painting, moving from still lifes and landscapes to abstract expressionism to something he called multi-forms. He once said that he was inspired by monsters and gods. He said the exhilarated tragic experience was the only form of art. Like many another fine painter in the late 1930s and early 1940s, he worked for the WPA and other Franklin D. Roosevelt-inspired work projects.

By the mid-1960s, Rothko was one of the most celebrated painters in America. His paintings sold for millions.

Two years after his divorce from Edith, he met and married a 22-year-old girl named Mary Alice Beistle, who became the love of his life. Two years later, he painted his masterpiece entitled "Slow Swirl at Edge of Sea." It took him almost a year to complete. It established him as one of the major contemporary painters in America, along with the likes of Jackson Pollock, Willem de Kooning and others. Fortune magazine did a feature on him in 1950. His paintings were selling for $50,000 or more.

Perhaps the most remarkable commission he received was the offer he got to do all of the interior paintings for The Four Seasons, the celebrated restaurant on the ground floor of the Seagrams Building. It came in 1959. He was not crazy about this offer, but because Meis van der Rohe and Philip Johnson had accepted the job to

BREAKING NEWS

Commuter Connection to Run Through June

The additional LIRR train service that was scheduled to end Memorial Day weekend, will now run through June, but only on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. This comes as a relief to the many school district employees who plan to use the service until the school year ends in late June.

Springs Vandals Arrested and Charged

Two 15-year-old East Hampton residents were arrested for a five-day crime spree through the Hog Creek area in Springs. The boys stole an ATV, moped and other items, damaged property at five homes on Pembroke Avenue and Water Hole Road and spray painted a racial slur on one of the homes.

The teens were charged with juvenile delinquency with five counts of burglary in the third degree, two counts of burglary in the second degree, three counts of criminal mischief in the second degree, two counts of criminal mischief in the third degree and grand larceny in the third degree, along with criminal trespassing, graffiti and petit larceny.

Hampton Jitney Gets The Show On The Road

Announcing the Upcoming Show Tours Lineup...

GREAT SUMMER PREVIEW! – BOARD IN NYC OR IN SOUTHAMPTON FOR A FULLY GUIDED TOUR OF THE HAMPTONS – 1-Day Tour – Thurs., May 22nd – $135*pp. – 'The Hamptons' offers you old American tradition, beautiful seascapes and a diverse group of towns, each with its own flavor. A tour guide will escort you on the motorcoach giving you some of the rich history of this magnificent area of New York State. The Southampton Publick House will host your farewell dinner with their prize-winning brewery for beer lovers, an all around friendly ambiance and good food. Come and see the stunning landscape and some of the best beaches in the world. Tour package includes: Deluxe round-trip transportation from New York City, fully guided motorcoach tour, tour of Montauk Lighthouse, wine tasting at Duck Walk Vineyards and dinner in Southampton. *If you are beginning your tour in Southampton, tour cost is $99 pp. (SF)

"Gypsy" – Wed., May 14th – $185 pp. (SF), Wed., Aug. 20th – $182 pp. (NF) – The legendary Patti LuPone stars as Rose! This is a new revival of the classic musical fable, Gypsy. The show is based on the memoirs of Gypsy Rose Lee, and tells the story of the famed striptease star's early years in show business, under the thumb of her domineering stage mother, Rose. The vibrant score includes "Some People," "Let Me Entertain You," "Together," "Everything's Coming Up Roses" and "Rose's Turn."

"In the Heights" – Sat., May 17th – $170 pp. – "You can't take your eyes off the performers, and you won't want to."– The New York Times-Charles Isherwood. It's the July 4th weekend in Washington Heights, a vibrant and tight-knit neighborhood at the top of Manhattan. The musical explores the joys, heartbreaks and bonds of a Latino community struggling to redefine home. The New Yorker: "Big dreams, young love & a winning score." This musical is taking audiences to new heights. It has gotten the highest honors and the highest praise, among several awards. These include Best Musical, Best Music & Lyrics, Best Choreography and Best Ensemble Performance, from various presenters. (SF)

The Bronx Zoo – Sat., May 17th – Adults $62 pp./Children ages 3-12 $56 pp. – Take a walk on the wild side at the world's greatest zoo – the Bronx Zoo! With award-winning, cutting-edge exhibits, such as the Congo Gorilla Forest, and featuring over 4,000 animals, there is no other zoo in the world that offers the diversity, superb viewing, and world-renowned expertise that assures a rewarding experience and the knowledge that visitors can make a difference in the world around them. You'll receive a package that includes admission to the zoo, the Wild Asia Monorail, Skyfari Cable Car, Children's Zoo, Congo Gorilla Forest, Butterfly Garden, Bug Carousel, and Zoo Shuttle. (NF)

Mohonk Mountain House – Sun., May 18th & Aug. 3rd and Tues., Oct. 14th – $115 pp. Historic Landmark Resort located at the top of the Shawangunk Ridge and surrounding Lake Mohonk, offers thousands of acres of unspoiled scenery, beautiful rock formations, 128 gazebos overlooking the mountains and the only structure on the virtually untouched land is the sprawling Victorian Mohonk Mountain House. There is also a gift shop, gazebo shop and greenhouse garden shop, barn museum, and beautiful gardens. Tour package includes: Deluxe round-trip transportation, self-guided house tour, brunch on Sunday trips and hot & cold buffet lunch on Tuesday trip, carriage ride, and more. (SF)

Storm King Art Center and Brotherhood Winery – Sat., June 14th – $99 pp. – The Storm King Art Center is a museum that celebrates the relationship between sculpture and nature and the exhibition space is defined by sky and land. Five hundred acres of landscaped lawns, fields and woodlands provide the site for postwar sculptures by internationally renowned artists. The grounds are surrounded by the Hudson Highlands, a dramatic panorama integral to the viewing experience. The sculptures are affected by changes in light and weather, so no two visits are the same. The Brotherhood Winery is the oldest winery in the United States. Wine making is an ancient and honored art, and nowhere is this more evident than at Brotherhood. It has been in continuous operation in the picturesque village of Washingtonville, NY. They also have a unique artisan's gift shop. Tour package includes: Admission to the museum, a guided tour at Storm King from 11:30 a.m.–12:15 p.m. including a 30 minute tram ride at 1:00 p.m., a wonderful lunch experience at Painters' restaurant, a 3:30 p.m. winery tour and tasting and deluxe round-trip transportation. (SF)

"A Catered Affair" – Wed., June 18th – $175 pp. (SF) and Wed., June 18th – $180 pp. (NF) – In 1953, relationships are strained to the limit when a Bronx couple must choose whether to spend their life savings on a family business or to launch their only daughter's marriage with a lavish catered affair. This new musical, written by and starring four-time Tony Award winner Harvey Fierstein, explores the meaning of family and the need for love and is based on a teleplay by Paddy Cheesy and screenplay by Gore Vidal. Also starring Faith Prince & Tom Wapato.

Cape Cod – Nantucket & Plymouth – 4-Day Tour – Sun.-Wed., June 22nd-25th – $689 pp./do. – Our customers delight in this trip. We hope you will join us for another memorable experience on the Cape. Enjoy guided tours all the way to Provincetown, voyage via high speed ferry to the island of Nantucket and take a bus tour of the island. On the way home, you will tour and have a Thanksgiving Feast at the Plimoth Plantation (a living history museum detailing the daily life of the native Wampanoag and English colonists from the 17th century). Rothko (continued from page 15) design this extraordinary building at Park Avenue between 52nd and 53rd, Rothko accepted.

People found it astonishing that he had waffled about this offer. It meant wealth and fame. What was the matter with him?

Nothing was the matter with him. He was, however, a malcontent, an intellectual and an anti-establishment figure. If this bad-boy persona were an act, people would soon see that he was not kidding.

Rothko spent three years painting the murals for The Four Seasons, revising his usual horizontal perspective to vertical ones, in keeping with the vertical soaring theme of the restaurant and the building. These murals, made of separate panels, were then mounted on the walls.

During the months that followed, Rothko and his beloved Mell, as she was called, toured Europe. On their way home on a steamship, he had a conversation with the publisher of Harpers Magazine, in which he said that the Seagrams murals were painted to be "something that will ruin the appetite of every son-of-a-bitch who ever eats in that room. If the restaurant would refuse to put up my murals, that would be the ultimate compliment. But they won't. People can stand anything these days."

Arriving back in New York a few weeks later, he and Mell ate at The Four Seasons, but left so upset by the restaurant's pretentious atmosphere that he refused to finish the last mural, returned his advance and went and took the paintings off the walls to keep for himself.

(These murals are now at the Tate in London, the National Gallery of Art in Washington and at the Kawamura Memorial Museum in Japan.)

If this defiant act was heartfelt, it also dramatically enhanced his reputation. He was soon courted by the wealthy art patron Dominique de Menil and with her help spent the next 15 years, on and off, painting a second masterpiece, which is today the Rothko Chapel in Houston.

In 1962, Pop Art came on the scene. Rothko called them "charlatans and young opportunists."

By the mid-1960s, Rothko was one of the most celebrated painters in America. Many of his paintings sold for millions. But by the middle of that decade, he was too ill to summon the huge amounts of physical energy needed to personally paint these giant canvases even though he was just in his early sixties. He had two assistants who did much of the painting.

In 1968, at his studio now at 157 East 69th Street, he suffered an aneurysm of the aorta, a result of high blood pressure, excessive weight gain and heavy smoking. He ignored all pleas for him to stop.

Later that year, he and his wife were separated. On February 25, 1970, Oliver Steindecker, Rothko's assistant, went into the kitchen of Rothko's apartment to find the painter dead on the floor with his wrists slashed. A razor was lying by his side. It was considered a suicide. A subsequent autopsy determined he had also taken an overdose of anti-depressants. He was 66.

A huge battle over Rothko's estate went on for the next 12 years. A few months before his death, Rothko had changed his will so that instead of leaving the majority of his legacy to his 19-year-old daughter and 3-year-old son, he would create a trust fund with many of his paintings so the trust could provide education and living expenses for struggling artists. Instead of doing that, however, the trustees basically fleeced the trust, by selling the paintings at rock bottom prices to the Marlboro Gallery, which then resold them at market value, sharing the proceeds with the trustees.

In 1982, a judge found that gallery, along with the three trustees, guilty. They were removed from their trusteeship and were fined $10 million for their negligence.

As for Rothko's body, it was taken after a brief funeral out to Long Island to the peaceful village of East Marion and buried in one of the three gravesites owned by a fellow painter named Theodoros Stamos, who Rothko considered one of his best friend. (Rothko stayed at Stamos's East Marion summer cottage on numerous occasions during the 1960s.) Unfortunately, later on, Stamos was one of the three trustees convicted of robbing Rothko's trust.

About four years ago, Rothko's children, now grown, wrote a letter to the trustees of the East Marion Cemetery asking their permission to disinter Rothko's body and bring it to another

Two Summers

Future Vacationing in the Hamptons Will Be in the Spring & Fall

By Dan Rattiner

I am sitting on the beach this afternoon in the middle of April and it is a summer's day. The temperature is almost 70, the surfers are out and the birds are circling happily overhead. This has been going on for a week, and Friday it is expected to be 80.

This sort of thing has happened before, but never like this. It's been 50 degrees in April, which is fine, and on a particular day it has shot up to 70 or 80 but it's always been one day and it's always gone back down to normal the next day. So much for normal.

The nice thing about a week in April in the Hamptons at 70 degrees is that the authorities haven't really picked up on where this is all going. There are no beach stickers required. There are no restrictions on dogs on the beach or cars on the beach. There are no lifeguards or beach boys either. It's April, after all.

Well, yes it is and no it isn't.

I foresee a day in the not too distant future when the "season" in the Hamptons will actually be two seasons. The first will happen from April 15 to June 15. People will come out to go swimming, golfing and sailing during these months. And then they will come out again between September 15 and December 15 for more of the same. As for the summertime, we will all be indoors with the air conditioning on. It will be too hot to go out for any length of time. It will be like Arizona or Florida in the summer. The only time spent outdoors is between the house and the air-conditioned car and then back the other way. Nobody goes to those places in those months.

There is a precedent for this. And it is called Bermuda. This island, which is 600 miles off

THREATS TO CLOSE POPULAR MONTAUK BEACH

By T.J. Clemente

As it stands now, according to Mac Waters, Bureau Marine Resources Supervisor of the Suffolk County Department of Health, Nick's Beach in Montauk is in violation of New York State Sanitary Code sub part 6.2 pertaining to "bathing beaches and bathrooms" and will not be issued a permit to operate this summer unless an acceptable plan for permanent bathrooms is approved before June 1. Waters, who approves all 138 County beach permits, personally sent a "heads up" letter to East Hampton Town officials a few weeks ago. He has had no official response.

The problem is centered on the DEC's rejection of the Town's plan to build permanent bathrooms in a "coastal erosion zone." The state law mandates permanent bathrooms with running water for hand washing to be located at least 500 feet from the edge of the swimming zone. After the first warning in 2003, the Town put in portable toilets without running water. Waters has deemed that solution no longer acceptable due to the "disgusting nature in which the toilets were maintained." He said the Town of East Hampton has had five years to do something, but has done nothing.

At present, the nearest permanent public bathroom to Nick's Beach is 2,400-square-feet away from the swimming area — a distance state code and Waters deem unacceptable and intolerable enough to deny a permit to one of Montauk's most popular ocean beaches, located at the intersection of South Edison Street and South Edison Avenue. Waters explained that all Town-sponsored beaches must have a permit issued by his office within the Suffolk County Health Department. At the moment, only Nick's Beach was at risk for not getting a permit due to violation of the bathroom code.

North Carolina, has its prime visitor season in the spring and fall when the temperatures range from 70 to 80 and everything is just terrific for outdoor activities. Before or after that it is too hot or too cold. If you weren't familiar with Bermuda, you would not know this. Bermuda doesn't advertise this prominently.

But global warming certainly is occurring, whether from human activity or just because apparently the planet feels like it, which from time to time it does.

Yesterday the news was that the polar caps are melting faster than anybody thought they would, and the sea level around the world is now predicted to rise four feet by 2100. And then today's news is that after seven years in office saying no, no, no, there is no global warming, our President has announced that indeed it is a huge problem and we should make it a goal here in America to be carbon neutral by 2025. Of course he's leaving office in eight months.

There has been a move made by the country to deal with global warming of course. They extended daylight savings time. People across the country noticed that in March for the first time it was warm enough for outdoor activity but late in the day it was too dark to do it. They talked to their Congresspeople. They made them look out the window. And the Congresspeople agreed. And so daylight savings time was extended further into the spring and later into the fall.

Life will be very different in the Hamptons when we have two vacation seasons. The schools will have to go on a two vacation schedule so there can be lifeguards on the beaches, but not in the summertime when nobody goes there. Private schools in the city will have to go on the two vacation season schedule because kids of rich Hamptonites will not want to be out here when all they can do is stay indoors and play Parcheesi.

Golf courses will be open during the spring and fall but not in the summer, which at some of the clubs will be referred to as "heart attack" season. The same thing will be true of the tennis clubs.

November

Sport fishermen will LOVE spring and fall. Fall is their traditional fishing season when undersea life seems most active. So there will have to be more charter boats, but then they will all go to Maine and Nova Scotia in the summer, when the "season" there is still underway at that time.

For those who stay here to grin and bear it through the hot weather during the summertime, one of the great attractions out here, if it gets built, will be the indoor ski mountain in Riverhead. What a great thing! 100 degrees outside. And it's skiing on the snow in here. I do presume that up there in the Pine Barrens, they are high enough to be able to do just fine when the sea level goes up four feet.

I do think we will not actually change the names of the seasons. I spent a winter down in New Zealand some years ago and there the seasons are, of course, just backwards. They say in winter they swim and play outdoors. In summer, they have snowball fights and shovel the stuff. I think we will live with the change and not change the names of the seasons.

About four months ago, I got a press release from the Farmer's Almanac, whose offices are based here in the northeast. It's one of my favorite press releases. The person writing it was apparently asked by management to list all of the advantages that will occur here in the northeast as global warming proceeds.

She wrote about the rich and lush new vegetation we should see, about the colorful birds that will migrate here, about the new farms and crops we will have, about the fewer months that people will have to stay indoors in the wintertime. It was quite something. Sit back and enjoy global warming. We're the lucky ones here in the temperate zone.

Wait until 2025. We'll have everything solved by then. You'll see. Thank you, Mr. Bush.

Humans are so stupid. I think the philosophy, after 20 years of trying to let governments do otherwise, is that if we are going to lose the war with Mother Nature, we might as well enjoy ourselves while going down. •

Out of the Shadows

Father Alex's Little Church at 9/11 Will Be Rebuilt in the Sunshine

By Dan Rattiner

Father Alex Karloutsis is the priest at the Greek Orthodox Church in Southampton, and is, or was, also the priest for the small and historic St. Nicholas Church in Manhattan.

That church was the only church destroyed in the 9/11 attacks. It was reduced to rubble. And when Father Alex went there just a week after the attack to walk through the smoking ruins, he was as moved as anyone by what he saw. There was little left of the church. Picking through the ruins, he was able to find some fabric, several icons and religious objects. But that was all. He was there, and you might have seen him on television standing just behind our President as he announced to the world that this attack would not go unavenged.

Soon thereafter, workers began clearing the area, and at the same time architects began to design plans for it. The intention was to make a grand space that would include the Freedom Tower, a memorial park and at least a dozen other buildings. The Freedom Tower, at 1,776 feet, a number dear to all our hearts, would rise as the tallest building in the world.

As the planning moved forward, it was agreed that the small plot at the corner of Washington St. and Liberty St. where this church once stood would be considered sacred ground. The church would be rebuilt by the parishioners, of course. And it would be on the site where it was before. No one would touch it.

As time went on, however, a very strange decision was made about the future of a particular part of the site involving what was known as "Building Number Five." This was scheduled to become one of the 50-story towers that would surround the Freedom Tower. It would stand adjacent to the little church, and it would be the new home of JPMorgan Chase. They would move their entire operation there, including their executive offices and trading floor.

After signing on the dotted line, JPMorgan Chase went ahead with its plans, apparently

THE CPF QUESTION: PRESERVE LAND, OR WAY OF LIFE?

By T.J. Clemente

Standing in a Southampton farm field on June 22, 1998 with pen in hand, former Governor George Pataki signed New York State legislation that amended laws in the five towns of the Peconic region, creating the Community Preservation Fund. The CPF was to be a vehicle to purchase available open lands in order to preserve the character of the five towns.

To finance the fund, a 2% real estate transfer tax was created. At the time it was hoped the fund would raise $100 million in its first ten years. Now, eight years and four months later, according to Assemblyman Fred Thiele staff member Becky McGrory, the CPF has accumulated more than five times that number — over $518 million. In both Southampton and East Hampton, improved properties (homes) with values under $250,000 are excluded. If an improved property is sold for $2 million, the $250,000 is deducted so that the taxed amount (at 2%) is $1,750,000. The result is a $35,000 tax with the revenue going to the CPF.

In November of 2002, Town of Southampton residents voted for an extension to the CPF, adding its ability to borrow money so that the Town could purchase available land as quickly as possible before prices escalated. In addition, a program called PILOT allows the Towns to use 10% of the CPF funds collected each year to offset the deduction of real estate taxes lost to the towns to pay for services like fire departments and schools. Now under the guidance of proposals put forward by Town of Southampton Councilman Chris Nuzzi, new breaks are being introduced for first-time buyers in Southampton — the recommendation is that first-time homebuyers of properties up to perhaps $476,000 are exempt from the 2% CPF tax.

Recently State Assemblymen Marc Alessi, glossing over a particular fact they considered just a technicality. Their trading floor was larger than the land upon which this building would sit.

Various plans were put forward about where to put the trading floor, but none of them made sense. They were hemmed in by other projects on all sides, one of which was the little church, and though they floated the idea of perhaps buying one of those sites, they found nobody interested. They were stuck. The trading floor would have to be bigger than the building. But it couldn't be bigger than the building.

What they came up with was the strangest thing you ever saw. The building would rise as a 55-story-high slab, but from the 23rd floor to the 29th floor, the entire side of the building would jut out as some great cantilever. It was no small thing. It was physically possible to build this cantilever with steel and reinforced concrete. But when you looked at the sketches of the project, it really did look as if it might tip over. How could this building hold up that great, er, beer belly? It was awful. Here they were on a site where the buildings were supposed to soar, and there was a plan for a building with this growth coming out the side.

Worst of all, the beer belly would overhang directly above the small church. Had the church been a major cathedral, which it wasn't, the top of the steeple might have tickled the underside of the beer belly. But as it was, the little church would only rise about three stories adjacent to the big tower that comprised JPMorgan Chase. It would be just one of those usual things in the city, where a church steeple, or in this case dome, rises up against the backdrop of a steel and glass curtain. Nothing unusual about that. Until you got up to floor 23.

Inside the church, if you prayed straight up to heaven, you would be praying to the underside of the trading floor. Down below, people would be having ethereal thoughts. Up above, people would be having greedy, down below sorts of thoughts. I will avoid using the word hell. Oh well.

I spoke to Father Alex about this at the time. Neither building had been built yet, of course. Father Alex didn't see any problem with this. Yes, there might be shadows cast by the big skyscraper. And yes, they would be under it. But the Lord doesn't care about that. They would offer prayers that could go around the big beer belly and up into heaven.

And then, about three weeks ago, largely as a result of the subprime mortgage crisis that is rattling Wall Street and sending the economy tumbling, the situation changed. It involved Bear Stearns.

Bear Stearns was one of the worst offenders of the subprime crisis. Or to put it another way, one of the firms taking the biggest risks with the greatest rewards at the end if everything went okay was the trading firm of Bear Stearns.

Bear Sterns had spiraled down into an impossible. Everybody connected with it was running for the hills. And this legendary Wall Street firm, if nothing was done, would collapse into bankruptcy and maybe because of its size — it was involved with hundreds of billions of dollars — take the rest of Wall Street and maybe even the country with it.

In these extraordinary circumstances, the Feds stepped in and arranged for JPMorgan Chase to take over the place for a song. The Feds would finance it and accept the losses. At $2 a share, or even at $10 a share, which was negotiated later, it was an offer that JPMorgan Chase could not refuse.

And so, JPMorgan Chase took over Bear Stearns and with it the Bear Stearns headquarters building at Manhattan and 47th Street. This was a building with a bigger footprint than the one planned for the 9/11 site. And this was a building with its own trading floor. It occupies the first five floors of the building.

Hmmm. Suddenly JPMorgan Chase was announcing that they had dropped the idea of the new building with the beer belly hanging out over the St. Nicholas Church down at the 9/11 site. They wouldn't need it. At least they wouldn't need it for the trading floor part of their operation. They could use the trading floor at Bear Stearns. And they also announced, after having many meetings to make this decision, that they would continue to go ahead with "Building Number Five" at the 9/11 site. They would find other uses for it. Without the beer belly.

I have been thinking of calling Father Alex about all of this. Suddenly, the beer belly was out of the picture. The skies would clear and the little church of St. Nicholas would bathe in sunshine.

I know what I would say if he asked me about this. I would say the Lord Giveth and the Lord Taketh Away.

I'll give him a call. •

Poured Foundations, Grandfather Clauses & Variances Establish Territory

By Susan M. Galardi

To many people, the word "grandfather" evokes warm feelings of a beloved man who dotes over his progeny and provides a sense of security.

To people on the East End, grandfather evokes warm feelings about a beloved piece of real estate deeded to an owner who dotes (and gloats) over his property, which also provides a sense of security — not to mention a certain smugness that comes with living just a little out side the law, and the setbacks.

We're talking about grandfathered properties — structures that were in compliance at the time they were built, but because of rezoning are noncompliant — yet completely legal. While grandfathered properties have earned the respect of the zoning boards, they rarely endear themselves to neighbors, particularly new neighbors who are beholden to the most recent zoning regulations.

Imagine a residential area rezoned to half-acre lots, where there's an existing property on a quarter acre. Imagine that the property, once conforming, has a 4,500-square-foot home, attached garage and pool. Then you have a half-acre lot, with an owner who has not been grandfathered. An unentitled bastard, the red-headed stepchild of the community.

If this scenario were in East Hampton, and if a proposal recommended by the Town Board to limit building size were approved, that new owner could build a house "only" 3,400-square-feet, right next to his neighbor's behemoth. The current law allows for building coverage up to 20% of the property size, or 5,999 square feet (whichever is less) on a lot under 40,000 square feet. The current incarnation of the Town's proposal recommends 12% of lot coverage, plus 1,500-square-feet.

The Town Board believes that, when it comes to the size of a single-family dwelling, enough is enough. The proposal read, "The construction of very large 'monster' homes has begun to threat-

DEVELOPMENT COULD CHANGE HISTORIC COMMUNITY

By Dan Rattiner

Dennis Suskind, the former Wall Street investor and present day Hampton Classic board chairman, is embarking on another high-profile transaction here in the Hamptons with several of his friends.

Dennis and Co., under the corporate name of Jellow Inc. have signed an option to purchase 43 acres of vacant land that abuts Scuttlehole Road and the Sag Harbor-Bridgehampton Turnpike. If they get approvals from the town, they will have permission to create a subdivision there, consisting of a winding road and 14 home sites. When it gets sold, the area will have 14 new McMansions behind hedgerows, the investors will have pocketed a lot of cash, and the largest community of African-Americans in the Hamptons, which is just adjacent to this proposed development, will likely begin to disperse.

The African-Americans live in a tight knit area along the Sag Harbor-Bridgehampton Turnpike. The new development backs up to their modest homes. As these McMansions for wealthy New York summer residents rise next door, the black community will be under considerable pressure to sell its properties and move along. Money is money, after all, and time marches on.

As someone said to me the other evening, isn't that what it's all about? Money?

I don't think so. And a whole lot of other people don't think so. When a hearing was held recently for public comment on this proposal, the developers and town board members were very surprised to see a good many members of the black community in the audience, the very people who will "get rich" because of what might get approved here, to voice their objections to that very thing.

Hard as it may be to believe, there are those en the character of the community." But many members of the community are strongly opposed to the recommendation. Some have formed a very vocal citizen's advisory committee against it, and their point of view may have clout — months later, there are no meetings scheduled on the proposal. According to Town Clerk Fred Overton, "It's hanging out in limbo right now."

In the meantime, while the fate of building sizes hangs in the balance, there have been rumblings in the East Hampton real estate community. Literally. The ground is rumbling as some developers scramble to put a stake in the ground, a footprint in the door, so to speak, by digging foundations without immediate plans to build. According to an employee in the building department, as long as the foundation is backfilled and inspected, and its size conforms to current codes, it will be grandfathered in. Consider it a very large placeholder.

Suffice to say, many people find zoning regulations too regulatory. And for those without a legacy to stand on (or an empty lot to stamp a footprint), there is "the application for variance." The Zoning Department Board of Appeals is crammed with lawyers, builders, homeowners and neighbors speaking for or against requests ranging from the ridiculous to the sublime. This week, two variance applications hit the courts. One falls under the ridiculous category. Actually they both fall under the ridiculous category, even though they're at different ends of the spectrum. They include two homeowners in Georgica who seem to be tremendously altruistic, and one builder in Springs who is desperately pragmatic.

In Georgica, Kathleen Pike and Louis Forster applied for a variety of variances, partly in the hope of saving a large sycamore maple tree. Saving the tree would also allow the homeowners to build a tennis court on the far reaches of their property, about ten feet closer to neighbors' lots. And another variance is required for them to build a garage connected to the house by a breezeway. That structure would be 8,295-square-feet where "only" 7,401 are allowed. All of their proposed additions would amount to 13,750-square-feet of coverage on the 1.5-acre lot, exceeding the allowable lot coverage by 488-square-feet.

At the other end of the spectrum is Bradford Roaman, a contractor who recently built a house that exceeded the allowable size (and the specs on his building permit) by 40 square feet. At a hearing, Roaman proposed moving part of an upstairs wall, which would necessitate two variances for the remaining 10 square feet of overage. Those variances amount to about an inch in the front and 2 1/2 inches on the side. (Perhaps he should first look closely at the property — maybe there's a maple sapling sprouting up.)

One proposal is just 3.5% larger than what is allowable. The other, 2.5%. Tiny numbers, until you pit a 13,750 against 1,540 square feet. It is, as they say, all relative. But sometimes in the case of zoning, only "blood" relative will do.

A Turn of Events

Kathleen Turner, Actress as Author, Chronicles Her Life

By Katy Gurley

When Kathleen Turner finished filming the intense, hot, sexy scenes in the 1981 movie Body Heat, she went back to her trailer each time and sobbed.

"It wasn't that it felt degrading to do these scenes, it's just that it was so powerfully emotional for me," said the 53-year-old actress who made a personal appearance at Bookhampton's new Amagansett store on April 12. She was there to speak about her new memoir, Send Yourself Roses — Thoughts on My Life, Love, and Leading Roles. "When I'm on camera I don't feel like it's me that's actually being filmed; I feel like I'm just playing the character. But when the director says, 'Cut!' I'm snapped back to being a young woman who has exposed my body to these (mostly) men [on the crew]. They were courteous and considerate and we had the minimum amount of crew in every set...but, my God, it was so raw," said Turner, reading from the memoir, which was released in January and written the previous year.

About 50 people gathered to hear Turner, a long-time Amagansett resident whose house here will be sold during divorce proceedings from her 21-year marriage to Jay Weiss. She and Weiss legally separated about two years ago and Turner now makes her home permanently in New York City and has one child, 20-year-old daughter Rachel.

In the book and during her talk, Turner dished about the leading men she's worked with, including William Hurt, her co-star in Body Heat. "In those days he was pretty wild," she wrote. Of Burt Reynolds, with whom she starred in Switching Channels (a film she told the crowd was her least favorite to work on), she said, "Burt was just nasty. I don't do well with nasty people." About Jack Nicholson, "He was fun and he was outrageous and I enjoyed working with him very much." She starred with Nicholson in Prizzi's Honor in 1985. She speaks of an almost-affair with Michael Douglas on the set of Romancing the Stone in 1984. Douglas was separated but still married at the time. "We couldn't keep up the romance. But we kept our friendship," she said.

> "I do have stories to tell, and I believe in the power of sharing them...I've learned from it all."

Turner told the audience she almost didn't write the revealing memoir. "I just didn't feel right about the idea," she said, "it seemed kind of egotistical to write the book, but then I realized that I do have something to pass on — my values, and my hope."

She wrote, "I do have stories to tell, and I believe in the power of sharing them...I've had personal tragedies, rocky relationships, out-of-control drinking, and snarky critics to deal with. I've come back from a debilitating illness...I've experienced the joy of motherhood and the sadness of infertility, a happy marriage that eventually became a necessary separation. I've learned from it all."

Turner co-wrote her book with Gloria Feldt, the former president of Planned Parenthood and author of The War on Choice and Every Choice is a Story. (Turner's philanthropic efforts include Planned Parenthood, as well as People for the American Way and New York's Citymeals-on-Wheels.) Feldt worked on the book from 30 hours of tape Turner recorded.

"Gloria and I had worked together for years. When she left Planned Parenthood she came to me with the book idea. We got the contract after I finished doing Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? on Broadway," she told the group.

Turner knew from the age of 20 that when she turned 50 she would like to play the role of Martha in the Tony-winning play, which made its original debut on Broadway in 1962. With the determination that has been a hallmark of her life, just before she turned 50 in 2005, she had lunch with Edward Albee and asked him if she could read the part of Martha for him in hopes the play could be revived on Broadway. It hadn't been performed there since 1975.

The day she read for him, he called to tell her she got the part. The next week, she turned 50. Though Turner was fairly confident she could handle it, landing the role gave her the shakes, she said.

"I was terrified that I wouldn't be able to pull off all my boasts. It was a huge undertaking. A huge test," she said. She told Albee she saw the dark humor in the play, and wanted to be able to drive that to the surface.

"That humor is part of the characters' deep, deep hurt," she wrote. "They make each other laugh and they make each other laugh at themselves. Martha tries something and doesn't pull it off. George [her husband in the play] caps her, and she appreciates his effort. It's cool. It's part of their relationship. Honestly, I never understood why people didn't understand how funny this was."

Turner was nominated for a Tony award, and though she didn't win, critics hailed her and the play as great successes.

Turner was born in June of 1954, the third of four children, to Richard and Patsy Magee Turner. Her father was in the U.S. Foreign Service and the family moved from Canada to Cuba to Venezuela to England during her childhood, which she describes as "happy and adventurous." While attending high school in London, Turner became enamored of the theater. It was also there that she developed her trademark — that sexy voice.

Following the devastating death of her father during her senior year, she moved back to her mother's family home in Missouri. "Talk about a culture shock," she quipped. She studied theatre at Southwest Missouri State University and later transferred to the University of Maryland, where she graduated with a degree in theatre arts in 1976. Turner boldly moved alone to New York in 1977 with $100 in her pocket. Working as a waitress, she soon got an agent and landed two roles, one on Broadway in Gemini, the other on the NBC daytime serial "The Doctors." Turner's voice persuaded Lawrence Kasdan that she should be Matty Walker, a manipulative femme fatale in Body Heat, his directorial debut and her film debut, which made her a star.

She starred in one movie after another in the 1980s and into the 1990s, including The Man with Two Brains with Steve Martin, and later Crimes of Passion with Anthony Perkins, The Jewel of the Nile and so many others.

While filming the comedy Serial Mom in 1994, Tuner began having "inexplicable pains and fevers." After the film wrapped, she began noticing she couldn't get into any of her shoes — her feet had suddenly grown two sizes. "I went to a podiatrist who said there was nothing wrong, expect that maybe I was vain. But then later I couldn't turn my head or move my arm and I went to my general practitioner who took blood and told me I had rheumatoid arthritis," she said.

With serious joint pain, Turner suffered from the disease until recently when new drugs with fewer side effects came onto the market. Side effects of earlier medications proved debilitating and caused weight gain. People gossiped that Turner was letting herself go — drinking and using drugs and eating too much.

"Still I did not reveal what was happening to me," she wrote, adding that until she went public about her illness, she preferred the gossip to admitting she had a chronic disease.

Today, Turner has battled back from RA and is doing well. After her successful run in Virginia Woolf and some recent TV appearances, in February she got the thumbs up from critics for her direction of the Pulitzer Prize-winning Southern drama Crimes of the Heart at the Laura Pels Theatre in New York.

And now she has events around her book, which got its title from a long habit. Whenever she's in the theater, particularly as an actress, when all the flowers are gone after opening night, Turner rewards herself. "Every two weeks, I simply send myself roses," she said.

Plenty of Nothing

Developers Cancel Meeting, Bulova's in Limbo — Again

By David Lion Rattiner

Quite possibly the most pathetic example of failing to move a project forward is the consistently thwarted efforts to turn the Bulova Watchcase Factory into something useful for Sag Harbor. I've been covering this story for three years, and if there's one consistent word that resonates loud and clear each time the Bulova building issue is raised, it is "nothing." Absolutely nothing of any substance has happened with this building and that is what's pathetic.

As the price of real estate and the glamour and appeal of the Hamptons have grown, so has the desire to keep things the way they are, and maybe that is the logic behind having a giant, crumbling, vacant, toxic building stand right in the middle of one of the most beautiful villages on the East End.

But even after literally decades of lack of progress with this building, we still must report any sliver of hope or activity surrounding the building. Ironically, for this story, the news is the opposite of progress. Last week a vote on Bulova in Sag Harbor was canceled. The vote, which canceled for the third time, is considered to be the deciding factor on the building's future — on the topic of whether to override an on-site affordable housing requirement that will allow the construction of a luxury apartment complex. The vote has been postponed until June 17.

Just when you thought the Bulova building project was going to move forward, major questions are now being raised and the reason is because it was the developers — Sag Development Partners — who cancelled the meeting. Since developers are the very people who usually do everything possible to get their projects built, their action raises an eyebrow.

SDP has been working tirelessly, filling out applications, getting licenses and environmental approval and doing it all with amazing endurance, waiting years for a vote like this. A call to SDP was not returned, and that has fur-

AS TUITION INCREASES FOR SPRINGS, SO SHALL TAXES

By T.J. Clemente

At an open meeting held on April 21 at Springs School, the Springs School Board presented six options to the community for their 2008-2009 budget considerations. The handshake agreement proposing a solution to the East Hampton school district's tuition problem with Springs for next year was rescinded by East Hampton, leaving the Spring's School Board to make adjustments and consider options.

The proposals will increase the school taxes on a home in Springs (assessed at about $600,000) by anywhere from $226 to $382 per taxpayer. The Springs School Board will make a decision by April 25, with the hope of keeping the estimated tax increase under 10%.

The meeting was spirited, with Springs residents' reactions ranging from understanding to irate. Once again, East Hampton will charge Springs over $21,500 for each of its 289 students. This increase would raise Springs' total tuition bill to $6.74 million. The previous handshake agreement was based on a sliding scale of cost for 100 students — the rate for the first 100 students would be the full $21,526 each; the next 100 would be discounted 10%; and the next 100 would be discounted 20%. The purpose of that agreement was to offset a 28% increase above the current tuition fee of $16,800 per student that East Hampton was going to charge Springs. Also included in the handshake was the possibility of creating one school district for the Town or at least discussing the idea. According to the Springs Board, that discussion is ongoing.

But because of a change in the way the State will address BOCES funding, Springs will receive more aid at the cost of East Hampton's BOCES state aid. Some put the figure at around $900,000, a substantial loss to East Hampton that may have been the motivation for the Town to move away from the handshake deal, according to the Spring's Board. In a telephone conversation, Becky McGrory of State Assemblyman Fred Thiele's office, said that Thiele's recommendation was for officials to work out a plan. Then he, as the ranking Republican member of the State Assembly Education Committee, would do ther fueled speculation that they are getting cold feet about the project, which includes 49 units that exist in the building and an additional 16 units in seven different townhouses, as well as a pool and recreation area.

The chairman of the Zoning Board of Appeals, Michael Bromberg, was surprised by the cancellation. After all, he is normally the person who does the canceling regarding this project. The last two times, he cancelled the meetings because the Board had not yet decided on what it was going to do about the affordable housing requirement, and whether or not they were going to accept the $2.275 million payment proposed by the developers to go toward a housing trust — thus voiding the requirement for affordable housing.

But when SDP didn't show up for the vote, essentially canceling it, there was speculation that they may be re-evaluating the business plan. Michael Eicke, the owner of the Christy Antiques building, confirmed that SDP was looking to break a lease they signed in September for an office to accommodate real estate agents who would show the completed Bulova apartments.

We can only wait and see what will happen with this project, which has been going on for almost half a decade now. But so far, the events surrounding this building have had the same historic results, which is nothing. It is tremendously frustrating for the people of Sag Harbor to have to watch this kind of a project fall through when a reputable developer had come along and was willing to work with just about every obstacle that prevented the building from being put to good use. But there is, of course, still that sliver of hope that one day, in this lifetime, we'll have a Bulova building in Sag Harbor that is used for something, instead of nothing.

what he could to help. The 2008 Approved New York State Budget Aid to Education already includes a 20.34% increase to Springs, with the amount set at $1,390,410. That's an increase of $234,000 according to McGrory. The 2007 State Aid slated $100,000 to the district for property tax relief was increased to $300,000 in the 2008 budget.

East Hampton School District received $2,517,544 in New York State Budget Aid to Education — that's about $84,000 less than the previous year, a decrease of 3.25%. In the other Town of East Hampton school districts for 2008, Montauk will receive $802,590, an increase of 11.56%; and Amagansett will get $349,871, a decrease of 8.83%. In a prepared statement, Thiele said, "Former Governor Spitzer was determined to severely short-change Long Island…Governor Patterson is to be commended for working with the Long Island delegation." His office puts Long Island's share of the education aid at about 13%. But it was allotted more this year — with Suffolk County getting an increase of $140.2 million. The largest amount of aid to a Suffolk County school district was South Country, which received a whopping $54.9 million, the largest increase of 35.24%.

Meanwhile Springs and East Hampton school districts locked into their positions, forcing Springs School Board Superintendent Thomas Quinn to present his proposed budgets that ranged from $21,139,916 to $21,705,354. The budgets include proposals to decrease the number of children in each class in the lower grades by having off site classrooms for pre-K, as well as the high school tuition increases.

Quinn is doing all he can to avoid double digit increases to the Springs' taxpayers. April 25 is the date Springs is required by state law to have its budget in place. The date for the vote on a proposed 2008-2009 school budget for Springs taxpayers is May 20.

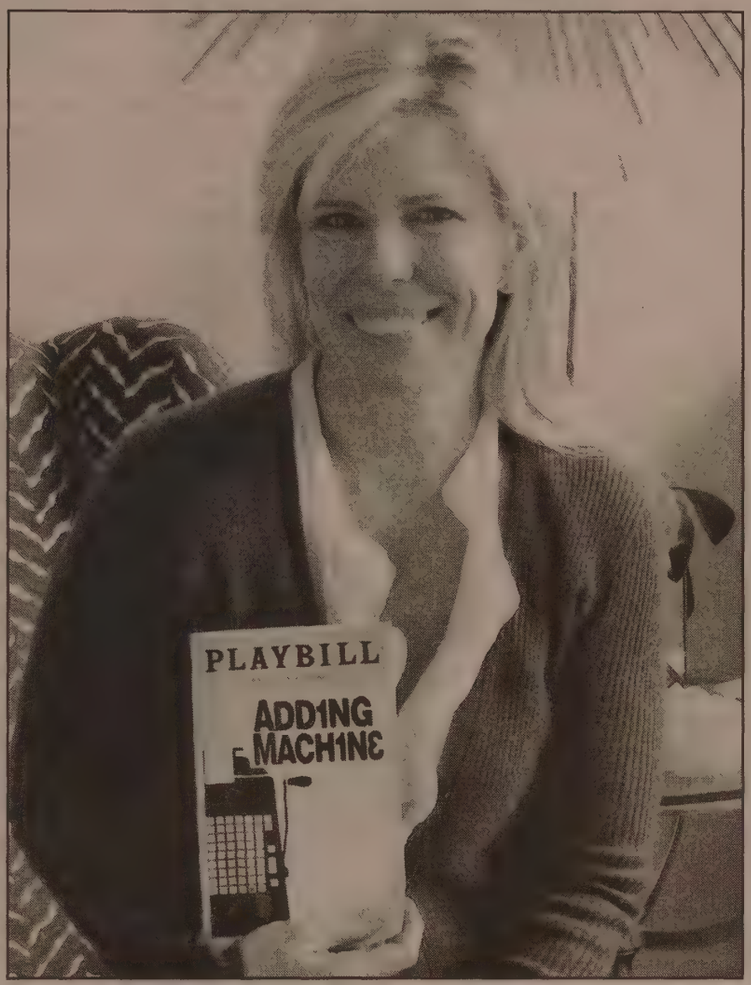
Who's Here



Margaret Cotter
Producer

By Susan M. Galardi

The music...It sounds like Philip Glass. Maybe not — more like Stravinsky, Rake's Progress. Wait. That part sounds like Barber — Vanessa. Oh, okay, Sondheim, Into the Woods. No...Berg, definitely Berg — Woyzzeck.

The singer...Sounds like a Broadway belter. Hmm. Maybe pop or cabaret? No, more legit. Oh, she's an opera singer.

These thoughts rushed through my mind during the first five minutes of Adding Machine. Searing impressions that disappeared as quickly as they made their marks. This new musical, imported from Chicago and currently playing in New York's Minetta Lane Theater, is defiantly uncategorizable, incongruous yet incredibly cohesive. Just when you think you have it figured out, something unexpected, unexplained yet completely understandable happens. Adding Machine has been called "improbably brilliant" by The New York Times — a description as oxymoronic as the show itself.

But the theater community is decisive in its opinion. In Chicago, the play won the Joseph Jefferson Award – that town's version of the Tony. In New York, in addition to the Times' rave, TimeOut suggested it might be "the best musical of 2008." It was nominated for six Lucille Lortel Awards including best musical, director, lighting design, costumes, lead actor, lead actress; and The Drama League nominated it for best musical on Monday.

One of the three producers credited with bringing this remarkable show to New York is Margaret Cotter, an ivy-league educated former Brooklyn D.A. turned theater producer who splits her time between her apartment in New York, her home in the Amagansett dunes, and anywhere the pursuit of the next hit show takes her. When she finds it, the decision is clear, as it was with Adding Machine.

"Very rarely do I find shows that sustain a style so well," said Cotter in an interview in Amagansett. "It's like a film. I've been involved with so many shows, but not like this."

Cotter's producing credits during the last ten years include Alan Bennett's Talking Heads, Bat Boy and Lypsinka! (Off-Broadway); and The Flying Karamazov Brothers' Catch!, Forbidden Broadway, and I Love You, You're Perfect, Now Change in Chicago. She was a co-producer of one Broadway musical, the promising Elvis tribute All Shook Up in 2004. "I thought it was a shoo-in," said Cotter, a slim woman with steely blue eyes contrasted by an ever-present smile. "But it lost money. People wanted Elvis."

Unlike a show based on a veritable household name, Adding Machine came without that comfort level of familiarity. Directed by David Cromer and written by Jason Loewith and Joshua Schmidt, who also composed the score, it opened February 25, has been extended two weeks past its mid-June deadline, and according to Cotter, it will most likely be extended again. "Our advance sales are growing every week," she said, "which means word of mouth is happening."

This past Monday, Cotter sent an email that read: "We received four nominations from New York Outer Critics..."

Adding Machine is based on Elmer Rice's 1923 play about a hapless number cruncher who, after 25 years of service to the same company, is replaced by a machine and subsequently murders his boss. In this musical adaptation, almost completely through-composed, German Expressionism meets theater of the absurd, meets modern opera, meets performance art. In other words, uncategorizable. Cotter was introduced to Adding Machine by Scott Morfee, who runs the Barrow Street Theater with his partner Tom Wirtshafter and had seen the show in Chicago. "I knew Scott from the industry. He called me about the play in October," she said. "The show had closed — it only had a six-week run. I got the music and the script and was captivated."

Cotter was quick to admit that there was another factor, beyond her impressions and Morfee's recommendation, that helped seal the deal. "It was the reviews. The reviews were really important," she said. "I knew the critics who wrote them. I knew their taste."

The three decided to take the chance with Adding Machine, but it was a calculated risk. "It helps being the landlord," said Cotter who, in addition to producing and co-producing, will also "four-wall" a show — that is, book it in one of her own venues. She is president of Liberty Theaters, which owns and operates the Orpheum, Union Square and Minetta Lane in New York, as well as the Royal George, a four-theater complex in Chicago.

"There is a 90% risk of failure in theater," she said. "The minimum cost to produce a show in a smaller off-Broadway house is $500-600K. I wouldn't recommend producing on your own — I stay away from producing solo in New York."

Cotter grew up in Los Angeles in a family that owned movie houses including New York's City Cinemas. She studied law at Georgetown and became an assistant District Attorney in Brooklyn. "It was fun — there was a huge amount of theatricality," she said. "It was a very busy office. I tried a lot of cases and I got a little burned out." The year she left the world of criminal justice, Cotter's father entered the world of New York theater, soon to be followed by his daughter.

"My father was negotiating to buy the Minetta Lane — he wanted to turn it into a small single screen art theater," she said. "The owners had booked a show for three months, just as he was closing on the deal. The play opened — it was Other People's Money, and it ran for five years."

Ironically, Adding Machine is having its run at the Minetta Lane, 10 years after the 1998 acquisition. That same year, Cotter made her first foray into the business, as a coproducer of the blues/rock musical, Love Janis, based on the letters of Janis Joplin. It ran in one of Cotter's Chicago venues, and was booked at Bay Street Theatre in Sag Harbor a few seasons ago.

In 2001, some of the "other people's money" needed for a new production belonged to Cotter. For Bat Boy, the hilarious, ripped-from-the-tabloids musical, she invested for the first time and negotiated her first deal. "I met the director. Scott Schwartz – Steven Schwartz's son," said Cotter. "I wasn't able to see the workshop production of Bat Boy, but I read the script — it was such camp, but so well done. And as soon as I heard the music, I was sold."

Bat Boy opened in New York in February at the Union Square Theater. "It was very well received by the New York critics," said Cotter. "By August it really hit its stride. Then September 11 happened." While Bat Boy went on to have a life, the show never regained its footing in New York.

Not so for Adding Machine, which has been on a steady forward march. "The minute the reviews came out, two film companies and two Broadway producers approached us. And there was interest for the publishing rights," said Cotter. "But I want to hold off, maybe get more nominations."

This past Monday, Cotter sent an email that read: "Just in...We received four nominations from New York Outer Critics — Outstanding New Off-Broadway Musical, Outstanding New Score (On or Off-Broadway), Outstanding Director of a Musical (On or Off-Broadway) — David Cromer, and Outstanding Featured Actress in a Musical — Amy Warren. This is really great for us."

Welcome to the world of "beyond your wildest dreams" for Cotter and her team.

"It has been such a great experience," she said. "Tom, Scott, David, Jason, Joshua — we're a small group and we balance each other. There are no egos. None. Everyone is just trying to make this show work."

With the School Board presidents doing what they can to hold down the cost to the taxpayers, they heard the voices of the people who clamored about keeping the tax increase as low as possible. Some Springs residents intimated they'd vote for the "austerity budget." But even the austerity budget would raise the individual taxes by $180. Tough choices needed to be made now that there's no hope for East Hampton's Board to reconsider a softer position on the tuition. Some believe that it's in the best longrange interest of the Board to do the right thing, not the least expensive thing. Once the deal is struck, Thiele's help may be needed to give more State money to Springs School District for property tax relief.

How could you go wrong?

And I would also save a few bucks.

You know how it is.

How was I to know that the free dinner would be in that hole in the ground that was supposed to be my pool.

On its own salad.

I don't know what to do. The other guy is gone. His phone is disconnected.

Now my wife isn't talking to me.

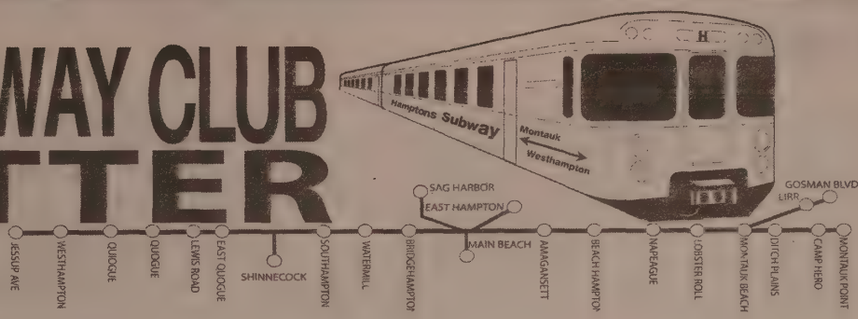
THE HAMPTON SUBWAY CLUB NEWSLETTER



Along with the New York Subway System, Hampton's Subway is the only underground transit system in the State of New York.

By Dan Rattiner

April 18-April 25, 2008
Riders: 1,426
Rider Miles: 12,060

The Hampton Subway is running! The Hampton Subway is running again! I can't believe this has happened. But it has. Last Tuesday at midnight, a whole crowd of us demonstrating against the closing of the subway in Hampton Bays ran down the stairs to get in. The cops didn't stop us. In fact, many joined.

You wouldn't believe this, but there is no door or gates down at the bottom of the stairs, so you can just walk right onto the platform. And guess what was there? Yes! A subway train at the stop, the doors open and ready to go. We jumped the turnstiles and went aboard. From looking at the debris and the newspapers left in some of the cars — we found a Dan's Papers from early March — this train was last in service on February 17, the day they sold the subway.

But I can tell you that all this crap about the Hampton Subway System being sold and being converted to an underground club for the rich is simply not true. There are no fancy renovations under way. There's no spa or private millionaire's club off the platform in Southampton, no Eliot Spitzer heading up a team of security guards, no art on the walls, no nothing. And I can tell you all this because although at first we climbed on the train just to sit in the cars for old times sake, suddenly there was someone running through the cars asking if anybody was a motorman or something. And so the found hero of this. His name is Frank McNamara and he's a retired motorman from the New York Subway System living in Hampton Bays. And so he went into the motorman's booth in the front car, turned the key in the ignition and off we went.

He went real slowly at first. He was worried that there were trains parked in other stations. But there weren't. We drove the entire route. The trains are in the Montauk yard. As near as we can figure, all the trains got parked there and then Commissioner Aspinall and his cohorts took this one train back to Hampton Bays to the main office there and that's where they were arrested. There's no other explanation for this.

We've now got nearly half the trains running and they're leaving every half hour, not quite as great as the every 15 minutes we've been used to. We need more motormen! More conductors! More subway token booth operators! If you were one of the 1,000 people who lost your job when this place got sold, come on down. We're running two shifts — 6 a.m.-1 p.m. and 1 p.m.- 8 p.m.

As for the rest of you, we're up and running and we are FREE! We've found a huge stash of subway tokens — there are billions and billions of them. And we've got some of them out by the turnstiles in driving range pails that Poxabogue Golf lent to us so you don't have the jump the turnstiles. And there are huge storage tanks filled with diesel out at Montauk and if we can get enough volunteers, we can keep this subway in service running for the next month at least. I don't know yet how this is going to turn out. But we'll figure something out. The Hampton Subway is back!

gravesite in Valhalla, New York. It was their intention to unite their father with their mother, Mell. They would be buried there side by side.

The trustees voted 6 to 1 to honor this request, and sent a letter to the heirs saying so. The exhumation could go forward without delay, but they said they would only approve the moving of the body if ordered to do so by a judge. They said later that they feared community objections. This would allow the community to sue if they chose.

As time went by after the vote, all of the trustees began to realize what this move might mean to East Marion. And soon, a majority of them were united against the move.

George Morton, the president of the cemetery association, said that he regrets voting with a majority when the first letter came in, and he has changed his mind.

"As far as I can see, he should stay right here," he said, adding that he had only recently realized that Rothko was such a famous artist.

"This is a place that was a comfort to him," said another trustee. "While I respect the family's wishes, I think he is where he belongs and where he should be."

The reference librarian at the nearest library to East Marion, the Floyd Memorial in Greenport, said that she is frequently asked by visitors how to get to Rothko's grave.

"He's been with us nearly 40 years. He should stay with us," said Nancy Poole, who is Secretary-Treasurer of the East Marion Cemetery Association.

Even those well beyond East Marion want Rothko to stay.

Christina Strassfield, curator of East Hampton's Guild Hall Museum, said, "So many of the first and second generation American artists made their homes out here. We consider them our heroes. Rothko belongs to the East End."

East Marion really does not have that much going for it. It has Truman Beach on the Sound. There is a motel, the Blue Dolphin. There are some woods, some wildlife, a few ponds and lakes. There's even a dam. About 740 residents live in East Marion.

It was founded by the English colonists in 1661. The colonists made friends with the Corchaug tribe who called the place in translation, Oysterponds, so the colonists called it that too. In 1836, Oysterponds became two communities, both of which wanted Oysterponds in the name. However, after some talk it was decided that neither would get it. The most easterly of the communities would be called Orient because it was at the very tip of the North Fork, and the more westerly part of the former Oysterponds would be called Marion after the Swamp Fox of the Revolutionairy War, General Francis Marion. Soon thereafter, however, it was learned there was a Marion already in use in upstate New York. So they wound up calling the place East Marion.

In 1880s, President Grover Cleveland was taken through East Marion in a carriage on his way to the Orient Point Inn for a weekend. Actress Sarah Bernhardt performed in nearby Greenport and James Fenimore Cooper wrote Sea Lions set in Orient. Three sisters in the Tuthill family, Cynthia, Lucretia and Asenath, were little people and accomplished seamstresses and in the mid 1800s, their brother Rufus built them a house with reduced dimensions, which still stands on Village Lane. And that's about it. Mostly East Marion is just a place on the way to someplace else.

No wonder the people of East Marion want to keep their Mark Rothko.

By the way, the Swamp Fox never set foot in East Marion. He lived his whole life in North Carolina.

AS WE GO TO PRESS

We have learned that State Supreme Court Judge Arthur Pitts has granted permission for the move. Rothko's body will be moved to Westchester, and Mell's body, which is currently in Cleveland, will be moved there too. Together, through eternity, they can be side by side.

What we need now is a volunteer, someone prominent in the art world willing to move to East Marion for the remainder of his or her life and then be buried there. The homage of future art lovers would be his or her reward. •

While it's not illegal to swim in the ocean, it is illegal for a town to charge money for parking stickers for a beach that doesn't have a County permit. Waters expressed his concern that this major Montauk beach may be closed unless Town officials come to life with an acceptable, viable plan to follow the State code. He is not interested in closing the beach but insuring acceptable legal health conditions that bathers at public beaches are entitled to. He intends to eliminate a health hazard due to unsanitary conditions at "overused smelly portable facilities that don't meet code."

Laraine Creegan, Executive Director of the Montauk Chamber of Commerce, said, "The chamber is trying to arrange a meeting of Town officials and Mr. Waters on April 25 to solve this problem."

She acknowledged that running water and improved temporary toilets are needed, at the very least. She wasn't sure if these proposals alone would be able to persuade Waters to issue a permit for, as she put it, "One of Montauk's prime beaches during the summer."

Waters travels around the County to inspect town-sponsored beaches to see if they comply with the codes, as well as beaches that are not officially Town-sponsored but might be unofficially sponsored and require designation and a permit. In recent years, Two Mile Hollow Beach in East Hampton was so designated after a series of events that started with complaints from a homeowner. Waters investigated, and saw more than 50 people swimming, and a paved parking lot accommodating numerous cars requiring permits. He ordered that the beach be made official with lifeguards and permanent bathrooms. Many longtime habitués believe the uniqueness of that beach has been compromised, but Waters feels it is safer and no longer a health hazard due to lack of bathroom facilities for its increasing number of bathers. He would not confirm nor deny that Egypt Beach, behind The Maidstone Club, was now officially being monitored. He did say that he is always looking out for the safety of residents wherever they bathe — as is his duty.

So the question is, will one of Montauk's major beaches be closed to swimmers this summer? Or will Town officials scramble and somehow put together a plan for long range and short range adherence to State and County law concerning health conditions? Waters stressed it was the last thing on Earth he wanted to do, as he was hoping East Hampton and Montauk officials were not going to leave him no choice. "I will not issue a permit if the beach is not in accordance with State and County code," Waters said more than once. So the clock ticks and hopefully some sort of solution can be reached. Otherwise the only thing swimming iat Nick's Beach will be the fish off shore.

Thiele and State Senator Kenneth LaValle have started a process to recommend further guidelines on how to utilize the 10%. It is that 10% provision that's the center of some controversy, but McGrory stated that a meeting to address this issue was scheduled well before any controversy arose. And now, it has been reported that Southampton Town Supervisor Linda Kabot would like to create a new system of calculating the funds for the PILOT program. Her proposal will recommend using the actual amount of real estate taxes lost to the Town as a guide to how much can be withdrawn from the CPF, and she plans to have the voters of Southampton involved in the vote on any changes.

Perhaps this is a bowshot being fired by Kabot, indicating a change in philosophy on the needs of the Town and how tax money should be spent. It seems that her intentions are to access the fund to relieve Town real estate taxes by using the CPF. Southampton voters may be put in a position to decide whether the CPF should be used to purchase open lands to preserve the character of the Hamptons, or as a vehicle to help augment the dollar cost of the increases in services to the town.

Springs Park was the first EH purchase with CPF.

This could cause a pattern to "go to where the money is" instead of increasing taxes. In East Hampton the issue now is not what can be taken out of the CPF, but about the borrowing of $8 million of the funds for short term budget shortfalls by Supervisor McGintee, and if it violated the spirit or letter of the law. Compound this with the question of what will happen if the struggling real estate taxpayer chooses to save money today at the cost of preserving opens lands for his children and their children. Figures from Thiele's office showed Southampton collecting $3.5 million in January and $3.2 million in February for the CPF this year. East Hampton figures come in lower at $2.09 million in January and $1.1 million in February.

Some argue that their children won't be able to afford to live in the town due to high real estate prices and taxes. The ability of families to stay and live in their hometown may be more important than preserving beautiful vistas. Without trust funds and fixed incomes based on huge investments, many residents realize their salaries just would not enable them to purchase homes and live where they grew up, and feel disappointed that their children have practically no chance at the American dream of owning a house like the one they were raised in, in the town they grew up in. Thus the reasons for Nuzzi's CPF relief to the Town of Southampton's first-time buyers. Thiele, Alessi and LaValle must balance their political philosophies with the stewardship of the Towns of Southampton and East Hampton's future with any new amendments to CPF guidelines.

who would put the pleasure of staring at a large number in a bank book in second place behind the joys of living in a warm, loving and supportive community.

The black community along the turnpike was founded from the struggle to free the slaves during the Civil War. Actually, it came into existence before the Civil War, when concerned northerners both black and white created the Underground Railroad so slaves could make their way up from the Deep South to freedom in the north.

After the Civil War, the community grew and when potato farming became the mainstay of the local economy around 1910, still more blacks, mostly migrants, came up here with their families to dig the potatoes and raise their families.

The centerpieces of the black community are the numerous churches along the turnpike, most notably the Baptist Church. Another important institution there is the Bridgehampton Child and Recreation Center, which provides day care and pre-school and post-school services for this hardworking blue-collar community.

You can argue all you want that bigger houses with fancier cars and expensive art and antiques are better than little houses with older cars and hand-me-down furniture.

But the part of the situation you are leaving out is Junior Brown's birthday party, Paul Jeffer's anniversary party, Uncle Bill's barbecue and slide show from his recent trip to New Hampshire, and a whole lot of other things that make up the fabric of a vibrant cultural community here.

To send them off with a few more bucks in their pockets and replace what they have built during the last two centuries here with a few more fancy houses that will only be occupied a few weekends a year and for the rest will just keep a bunch of house watchers, landscapers, electricians and alarm company workers employed, doesn't even come close.

There is plenty of vacant land available for more McMansions everywhere else in the Hamptons other than where a historic community of largely blue-collar workers already exists.

So yes, sound the alarm. And bring it all to the attention of the Town Board. Did Suskind and Co. do this deliberately? Probably not. The land came up for sale because the owner, also a vineyard owner, wanted to cash out. They picked up an option on it. And the outcome will be that they will either let the option drop without losing anything, they will make enough ruckus to cause the Town to buy the property to keep them from developing the land, which in real estate terms is called a "flip," resulting in a smallish multi-million dollar profit for scaring some people into thinking you might do some work, to actually DOING the work, which will largely destroy the black community and bring the developers either great riches or great losses, depending on the market.

So yes, in my opinion, an ethnic community filled with pride is worth sheltering and protecting. The Town is awash in real estate transfer tax money. Buying this property is a good way to use it. •

TWENTYSOMETHING... By David Lion Rattiner

Gas is $4 a gallon? Are you kidding me?!

Yes, it has finally happened. Gas in East Hampton is officially four bucks a gallon, and it is pretty awful, if you ask me. Every time I go to the pump I get angry, and not just a little angry, but like really angry. I consider myself an emotionally stable person, but I am this close to having a complete freak-out because of the price of gas.

It makes me crazy. I drive slower now to save gas. I don't accelerate quickly when I'm on a hill. I switch the car into neutral. I think of ways to stop paying for gas. When you live in Montauk and work in Bridgehampton, the dollars add up. I have been so nuts about gas prices that I have even surfed the Internet for a solution. I found myself at water4gas.com, which sells a book that teaches you how to install a device in your car that will double your gas mileage. All you need is a little baking soda and some distilled water and you are good to go. Just buy the directions for $100.

I sat there fascinated. THIS WORKS, I thought. This is the answer that I have been waiting for. I can afford a hundred bucks. That is only like half a tank of gas.

I ran across the editorial department and grabbed Tom Ratcliffe, a salesperson here at Dan's Papers who is very technical. "Tom, we have got to do this to my car."

Tom had a look at the website and was suspicious, but didn't want to give up hope. "I'd be willing to do this to a car. Let's give it a try."

And there we were, convinced that we were going to run our cars on water and everything was going to be fine.

I'm sold on the idea. The Man is keeping this technology from us. We'll just have to build it ourselves because that's the way it is. We haven't gotten the directions yet. I'll keep you posted.

I've also considered buying a motor scooter. I'm not so sure that a 200-pound guy would look too cool on a motor scooter, though. I'd have to lose a lot of weight and wear really trendy clothing, like a t-shirt that says "Soul Mug," and then constantly have conversations with people about the importance of soul mugs. I don't even know what a soul mug is. I can't live like that.

Maybe I'll become a Harley guy. I'll ride my motorcycle, even in the wintertime, and wear lots of layers. Wait, I know! I'll turn my car into a bio-diesel mobile and fill up my tank at McDonalds in Southampton. I saw a documentary about a guy who drove across the entire country in a car that ran on used vegetable oil from fast food restaurants. That's the ticket. Does anybody know how to do that? ANYBODY? ANYBODY? NO? WHHHHHYYYY??!!

ways at every subway stop demanding that the subway be reopened. My officers have been working crowd control. Last night I got a call on the radio from Sergeant Fred Feeney saying the crowd there heard some noise coming from down below. And he wanted permission to investigate suspicious behavior. So I told him to go ahead. I also told him to deputize everybody there so they could help him look. So they all went down to help but they didn't find anything.

What we have to do now is report the results of our response to the suspicious noises we investigated at the Hampton Bays Station to the owners of the Hampton Subway or the Hampton Subway Club, whoever they might be. But so far we don't know whom to call. The Commissioner is on death row and the warden told me they do not allow phone calls to prisoners on death row. Maybe we'll just wait until he gets out.

We also think from citizen reports made to us, that the Hampton Subway was never sold. We think these billionaires might have taken an option to make it into their "private club" just to make the State buy the subway system from them for hundreds of billions of dollars. And so we have detectives from our fraud division sorting through the paperwork in Subway headquarters here in Hampton Bays. And we will soon see.

The Hampton Subway is running! The Hampton Subway is running! •

HAMPTON TRADITION XXXIV — SOUTHAMPTON INN

By T.J. Clemente

The Southampton Inn has been a focal point of the community since Jim Passavia founded it in 1972. Twenty-six years later, current owner Dede Gotthelf purchased the Inn, which has long been a respite for so many visitors to Southampton including many of the rich and famous.

Gotthelf is a former Hampton Bays lifeguard, and recalled spending summers at her family's cottage in that town. "In 1951 my father went to rent the cottage for the usual $500, but ended up buying it for $1,000," she said, describing Hampton Bays in the 1950s as an "idealistic place that was so wonderful for real people to have a spot in the country at the beach."

Gotthelf went on to be one of the first women to attend Williams College, and afterwards worked for Chase Manhattan Bank, her mentor being the legendary David Rockefeller. She has summed up her career to date as a "banker, broker, bureaucrat, builder and now an innkeeper."

Gotthelf's vision is now focused on creating a world-class restaurant at the Inn. Oso, a steakhouse, will be opening in May and will have many creative features including children's tables and chairs so the youngsters can dine with their feet on the ground. Heather Dunn of Heather Dunn and Co. was brought in to cover the main wall with a unique mossy green weathered plaster. An outdoor cocktail section is also being created for guests. Gotthelf's enthusiasm for this project was evident, as she is personally selecting the art, chairs, tables and floors to make sure that Oso will be a wonderful platform for four-star Chef Peter Dunlop, who has worked at The American Hotel in Sag Harbor. Gotthelf added that Oso would present both classic and imaginative dishes featuring local produce that when in season she considers second to none.

The Southampton Inn has already been a traditional home for wonderful weddings, catered conferences, wine tastings and Town meetings. In fact, the Town gathered there to have a public forum with LIPA concerning the proposed power lines. And the Inn's 90 guestrooms have all recently been remodeled and refitted with Tempur-Pedic mattresses.

Another caveat of The Southampton Inn is its children's playroom that includes an authentic Viking range, video games, toys and TV. Along with the children's playroom, the Inn has a swimming pool and beautiful grounds with chairs strategically located for afternoon reading or private conversations. The grounds are so pristine that many a wedding photo has been taken on there in the last 36 years.

The Inn will also soon be the home of The Elaine Benson Gallery featuring the art of Kimberly Goff.

The future is bright for The Southampton Inn. Gotthelf is committed to keep the Inn and its soon-to-be-opened restaurant's atmosphere "Southampton country, casual crisp and clear with a lot of whimsy." The front desk staff — Kim, Holly, Rita, Katie, Michelle, Roy, Gerry — have all been seasoned in treating everyone who enters the Inn in a warm special way, being attentive to their needs and desires, and always with a genuine smile.

The definition of an Inn is a place that provides food and lodging for travelers. The Southampton Inn under the watchful skilled eye of Gotthelf will continue to be that and so much more.

The Southampton Inn is located at 91 Hill Street, Southampton. For more information, visit southamptoninn.com or call 1-800-832-6500/631-283-6500.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #495
Polygamy, the Game the Whole Family Can Play!

The Old Testament is full of polygamy, but it worked back then because so many women died during childbirth, so having a backup wife made sense. I believe that's the reason Mormons thrived on the American Frontier, where one in four women died during childbirth. Having a backup wife, or two, could literally make the difference in survival. Islam allows a man four wives, as long as he can support each wife equally, which creates a self-leveling system. I recall reading that Brigham Young, the leader of the Mormon church in the west, had 73 wives, the youngest being 13 years old, whom he married when he was in his seventies. That's not a survival marriage, that's legal rape.

As the events unfold in Texas, all I can think is that it's a great system for a man. You get to acquire new sex partners throughout your life — with the church's blessing — and none of your wives are allowed to complain. If I were a man and there was a religion that encouraged women to be silent and compliant and I could have as many as I wanted, I'd sign up so damn fast...

The men made all the rules and they make all the decisions. The women aren't allowed to wear makeup or cut their hair, and they all have to wear prairie dresses. They are taught that if they disobey it will cost them their immortal souls. Wow! I've got to hand it to Jeffs. He has managed to acquire complete control over hundreds of people who think he talks to God. Amazing.

Clearly, a woman has to be born into this cult. I don't think any of us with a brain could check it at the gate before joining them.

Penny, age 30, who joined the cult a year ago: George, are you gonna mow the lawn today?

George, age 48: Not today, sweetcakes, I've got to get Lucy pregnant. God's commandments come first.

Penny: Not Lucy, she's your daughter, remember? I think you're supposed to plow Jennifer today. But how long can that take? You can still get the lawn done.

George: Have one of the boys do it.

Penny: Can't, they're at the Temple studying "Polygamy 101: Don't Bother With Names, Call Them All Sweetcakes."

George: Well, you do it then and stop bothering me. I command you to mow the lawn and forbid you to bring it up again.

Penny: Okay, then you'll need to order someone else to make dinner for 37 kids.

George: Oh, were you on for dinner tonight?

Penny: Not anymore. I'll be doing something I can't mention.

George: 37? Are we up to 37 kids now? How did that happen?

Penny: Well, I could give you a clue. But instead, how about you just count your total kids once a week. You know how many chickens you have, right?

George: 142.

Penny: I'm not sure where it's written in the Bible, but I bet a man is supposed to keep track of his children at least as well as his livestock. Something like, "Counteth not thy children before they hatch."

George: I know being the leader of this family looks like fun and games to you, but I work hard for all 21 wives, you know.

Penny: Twenty wives, you said you married me to replace Constance.

George: Constance? Where did Constance go?

Penny: She cheated on you with Bill. She's his 17th wife now.

George: Well, that makes us even. I stole Susan and Patrice from him.

George: Left me with seven kids? I'll have her shunned for that!

Penny: They're your kids too, George. Aren't they?

George: Who knows? I'm so busy trying to keep everybody pregnant, if one slips by me, how am I gonna know?

Penny: On the outside, they'd say, "It's tough out here for a pimp."

OVER THE BARREL...

My Finger Lakes Riesling of the Moment

This week, I'm spending four beautifully relaxing days at a lakefront cottage just south of Penn Yan — smack dab in the middle of the Finger Lakes wine region. It's the off season, so Keuka Lake is quiet, almost eerily so when compared with the chaos that is often Long Island, but that doesn't mean there isn't anything to be excited about. In a word: Riesling.

Much like merlot dominates Long Island, Riesling rules the wine landscape up here. And, during our first afternoon tasting along the east side of the lake, I found what is my Riesling of the moment: Ravines Wine Cellars 2006 Riesling ($17).

No, it probably isn't be the best Riesling in the world, but it might just be the best in the region. And, in this moment, sitting out on the dock, my toes near numb as they dangle in the frigid water, sipping a lightly chilled glass as I type away on my laptop — there isn't another Riesling I'd rather have in my glass.

Deliciously minerally, with lime, orange blossom and crisp apple flavors, it's the dryness (many Finger Lakes Rieslings are made in an off-dry style) and a focused electric charge of acidity that bring structure and lift this wine to new heights. Medium bodied and lingers on the finish, inviting another sip or bite of your meal. This is Finger Lakes Riesling at its most elegant and food friendly. Best of all, it's a great value.

Winemaker Morten Hallgren is doing exciting things with other grapes as well.

Morten, who was raised in Provence on his family's vineyard, has a diverse winemaking background that took him from France to Texas, to North Carolina, and finally to the Finger Lakes, where he is best known for his six years as head winemaker at Dr. Konstantin Frank Vinifera Wine Cellars.

Morten Hallgren

In 2000, Morten and his wife Lisa bought 17 acres of land on a glacier-carved hillside on the eastern slopes of Keuka Lake. This land is located at the widest part of the lake, which allows grapevines to receive maximum benefit from its temperature-moderating effects. It has well-drained soils and is situated between two deep ravines, which drain cold air from the land during the winter. These ravines are the namesake of the winery. When I visited, they had just plowed 6 acres behind the tasting room for planting later this spring with Riesling, chardonnay, pinot noir, cabernet sauvignon and petit manseng.

When I was there, I got to taste some of Morten's first vintages at Ravines—a Riesling, a chardonnay, a pinot noir and a cabernet franc. All impressed, particularly the pinot noir, which is really just coming into its own.

Of the current releases, the 2007 Sauvignon Blanc ($18) stood out—even if it was only bottled two days ago. And, for anyone who thinks that great wine can only be made with the classic grapes of Europe, think again.

Ravines Wine Cellars 2006 Keuka Village White ($12), a blend of 80% Cayuga White and 20% Vignoles, was an affordable surprise that reminds me of the everyday blended wines from Alsace. The nose is fruity and fresh with loads of melon and peach with just a little floral character and minerality. Medium-to-light bodied, those same fruits dominate the palate with slightly tropical hints as well. There is a light sweetness to the wine, but more than enough acidity to bring balance.

I don't see many of these wines south of Westchester, but they are worth seeking out, either online or at the winery itself. The Hallgrens are doing great things in their welcoming little winery.

Last Friday at Duck Walk North Vineyards on the North Fork in Southold was one of the most amazing, elegant and first-rate parties this reporter has ever been to. It was hosted by Decision Women (www.decisionwomen.com), an organization that networks professional women and women business owners who raise money for charities. Clara Macri, the Chairwoman of the event, a former Wall Street success and world traveler, was all smiles with Lise Poulos, the EVP and CAO of Monster.com, who was the title sponsor of the evening.

Decision Women that evening raised money for Long Island Cares, The Harry Chapin Food Bank, the Long Island Farm Bureau and Good Shepherd Hospice. The night featured an amazing array of cocktails, wine and food, and the good people at Buoy One Restaurant and Caterers kept the food and the raw oysters flying through the party.

It was amazing to find out the Duck Walk North donated their gorgeous vineyard space for the event and our hat is off to Doctor and Mrs. Dan Damianos, the owners of Duck Walk, for making such a special evening possible.

The night included live singing performances from St. George Production, with impersonations of the music by Peggy Lee, Ella Fitzgerald and Faye Emerson. A sensational part of the evening was a professional dance performance by world champion dancers Kelvin Roche and Lori Ann Greenhouse. As my colleagues and friends from Dan's Papers, Catherine Ellams and Jean Lynch, smiled in amazement at the evening, we all sipped from our wine glasses and cheered. "Can you believe how lovely this party is?" Jean said.

"This is just so lovely, so fabulous," Catherine replied as she watched the dancers literally fly over the floor. You can see a video of these dancers on the blog at www.danshamptons.com.

"In five minutes we raised $5,000," Clara Macri told me when she described the small auction.

At the end of the evening, a fireworks display donated by Bay Fireworks President Charles Rappa went off in the background of the vineyard. The $10,000 fireworks show put the evening into the world-class category, it was truly magical. Everyone was in awe, including the people from the law firm Jaspan Schlesinger Hoffman LLP, who donated an incredibly large check to the cause.

It was pure magic on the North Fork last Friday, we are all so lucky to have things like this happen here.

Dan's North Fork

Athens Gyro & Grill

33 East Main Street
Riverhead
631-727-1301

John Mantzopoulos, the very dedicated chef/owner of this restaurant, offers some of the best gyros and grills in the world, but his restaurant offers so much more then that, making it an intimate and sensational place. In the past three years John has transformed the surroundings and décor of this relatively small ten-table restaurant into a very comfortable, welcoming taverna style venue where you can eat some seriously good and surprisingly affordable Greek and Mediterranean inspired cooking. On the night we ate there, he had just installed all new tables with larger tops to allow diners more room to enjoy their food, another small but telling instance of how he continually strives for improvement.

The menu is comprehensive and there are always daily specials based on the best available local produce because another major theme of John's cooking style is his emphasis on 'fresh, simple and local', which is really the way to describe truly good Greek cooking.

We started with soup, always, for me, one of the key tests of just how good a restaurant is. The lentil soup with roasted garlic was full of deep intense tastes and the texture was perfect. Chicken avgolemono soup is one of the Greek classics. Here the broth was light and fragrant with just enough lemon to bring out the full flavors and combined with beautifully cooked orzo pasta to complete another great soup. These are not just something to drink while waiting for your main course but are really beautiful dishes in their own rights.

Similarly, the Mediterranean salad with delicate baby spinach leaves, Kalamata olives, roasted red peppers and artichokes with a dressing of olive oil and vinegar was another dish to enjoy for its own style, simplicity and elegance.

For our main course we sampled some of the daily specials. Calamari usually appears on menus in its crispy fried version served with a tangy dipping sauce, but here John took some local fresh calamari, lightly grilled them over charcoal and then dressed them with a rich deep olive oil and balsamic reduction to make a delicate textured full flavored dish that made us savor every mouthful. The next dish was a bowl of salmon, shrimp, clams and scallops sautéed with olive oil, fresh basil, cinnamon and ouzo. The presentation was excellent and the blend of tastes and textures produced another great example of how simple is best, as long as you have great ingredients to start with. Finally we had the simplest and arguably the best of a great selection. When fish is exceptionally fresh all it needs is to be lightly broiled and served with a light sauce to make a great dish. This really was the case here, because the fluke melted in the mouth and the fresh lemon, capers and avgolemono sauce was a masterpiece. If you love fish and this is on the menu when you eat here, this should be a must, because it exemplifies the art of Greek cooking at its best and this is not just my judgment, but much more importantly, that of Stella, my Greek American wife, who said it made her reminisce of meals eaten at great tavernas in Greece. We also sampled a side dish of grilled beets that, with their deep earthy rustic tastes, are always a perfect complement to grilled fish dishes.

After these delights we really had no room remaining for anything other than a couple of Greek butter cookies and a cup of Greek coffee.

John has also put together a very interesting, eclectic wine list. He offers wines from all over Greece, from Macedonia to the islands of Evia and Santorini. The organic Rodito from Evia that I drank was a very crisp, full flavored white wine. I also had to try something else that was new, a wine from Israel. The Recanati Sauvignon Blanc from Shomron (Samaria) was pleasantly full of up front acidity and citrus flavors. The wines of Long Island are also well represented and all of the wines are well priced at $7 to $9 by the glass and from $20 a bottle. Appetizers range from $3.95 to $10.95 for a selection of traditional Greek mezes. Main courses range from $16.95 to $22.95 and include a choice of soup or salad and one side dish. Desserts, those delicious Greek specialties such as baklava and galactobouriko and wonderful creamy organic sheep's milk yogurt with sour cherry preserve, are from $4.75 to $5.75.

Riverhead is rapidly becoming one of those places where you can find a range of affordable restaurants offering excellent truly ethnic cuisine, and at Athens Gyro & Grill John Mantzopoulos carries the flag for his native Greece with great style. Mediterranean cuisine is regularly cited by the medical profession as being healthy so here you can eat well, enjoy everything and not feel guilty for a change.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

The weather was perfect this entire week for spring-cleaning inside and out. Speaking of spring, you know it has arrived when you attend the Hamptons Home & Garden Show at the Southampton Elks Fairgrounds on Route 27, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, May 2-4. There will be over 200 local vendors as well as vendors from all over the country with resources, ideas and services that include free interior design consults, cooking demos, unique products, rare finds and great bargains. There will be various events and a live auction going on throughout the show weekend, so log onto the Web site for complete information at hhgshow.com or check out the great supplement in this paper!

In Hampton Bays on West Montauk Highway at Accents J. Tortorella Swimming Pools you can save by purchasing outdoor summer classics early. Buy a furniture set before Memorial Day and take an additional 15% off. There are patio sets that start at $299, now that's affordable!

Hot Off The Press: Southampton's own Southampton Inn, located at 91 Hill St., is welcoming local residents for a limited number of swimming pool and tennis court memberships. A one-time fee of $1,000 for a family of four (two adults, two children under 16) or $700 for one adult will provide access to the Inn's all-weather tennis court and heated swimming pool (the latter surrounded by a luxurious table-and-umbrella-covered patio). In addition, members will be able to take advantage of the Inn's indoor game room, complete with big-screen TV, pool table, video games, a dedicated children's play area and fitness room. The Inn underwent extensive renovation earlier this year and an on-site restaurant will be completed in May. To sign up for a swimming pool and tennis court membership or for more information, contact the Southampton Inn at 631-283-6500, or visit the Inn's Web site at southamptoninn.com.

At the Clearing House on Country Road 39 in Southampton and on First Street in Greenport, there's a tag pricing sale on outstanding furniture, lighting, china, crystal, linens, artwork, pottery, rugs, fabric, jewelry, kids stuff and much more. This is a Charity Tag Sale Fundraiser to support their partnership with Habitat for Humanity. Log onto the Web site for additional information at clearing-housesouthampton.com

Waterstone Pottery, Southampton

In early spring many of us start cleaning up the yard, washing down the patio furniture, and getting the BBQ ready for some outdoor entertaining. Waterstone Pottery located at 76 Mariner Drive in Southampton is clearing out its old inventory of glazed, terra cotta, fiberglass and cement planters and marking them down to 60% off to make room for new spring/summer inventory. The spring pottery sale is now in progress. The sale also includes discontinued items at great deals that will not last long, so get going. Call them at 631 283 5747 for hours and directions.

Check out Patio.com on Montauk Highway in Southampton for their give-away free gift – Scorer Foosball table, V force air hockey or Centennial back bar – a $1,000 savings with the purchase of a Brunswick Showpiece pool table. With graduation and Father's Day coming up, this is an ideal gift idea.

If you are ready to dig holes and start planting, stop off at Marder's Nursery on Snake Hollow Road in Bridgehampton for a look at all the flowering shrubs, bushes and trees that are spreading their wings just in time for spring. There is all new inventory with lots to choose from in the garden shop sitting pretty in the center of the nursery that is filled with unique flowers, gifts, florals, supplies, reference books and so much more.

At Country Gardens at Bridgehampton on Snake Hollow Road look for sales on selected merchandise, getting you ready for spring planting, cleaning and gardening. The sale ends April 28, so get going and get an early start.

ON THE NORTH FORK: Mark your calendar for the North Fork Antique Association's spring promotional sales event and tour on Saturday, April 26, and Sunday April 27, from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. The self guided tour starts in Aquebogue and ends in Greenport. The North Fork antique shops will be offering discounts and something unique at each location, just look for the bright green balloons. The participating shops are: Small Holdings Farm, Robert Barker Antiques, Three Sisters Antiques, Antiques & Things, Antiques & Old Lace, Uncle Bobs General tore & Antiques, White Flower Farmhouse, L.I. Doll Hospital/Jan Davis Antiques, Willow Hill Antiques, Pastimes Antiques, Kapells Antiques, The Furniture Store Antiques, Triangle Sea Sales and Beall & Bell.

Until next week. Ciao and happy early spring shopping!

If your shop is having a sale, new inventory or you are a new business or have relocated, and you want everyone to know about it, please e-mail me at: shoptil@danspapers.com and at newkids@danspapers.com or via fax at 631-726-0189. I would love to hear all about it!

Laughter is Contagious

Central Park is clearly the place to be this spring. Earth Day was a huge success, so thanks to all of you who participated. Your planet (and I) appreciate the effort. But your job in the park isn't over just yet, because I'm about to assign you a secret mission. If you wish to accept, read on – if not, read on anyway, because by the end of the article, you'll surely be gathering your guffaws and giggles and saving them up for a genuine laugh riot.

Want to know what all the hootin' and hollerin' is about on May 3? It's called LaughTour. Here's the scoop (and trust me it's a very in-the-know kind of event): On May 3 (that's right I'm giving you plenty of notice to turn down garden party invites) you and your friends must arrive at the East Green in Central Park (5th & 69th) at noon, where your trusted leader, Doug Weitz of Life Studio, will hash out the precise details of the next hour or so of your life. A lot of the information is currently under lock and key, but this is all you need to know – yes, it's one of those need to know basis kind of things.

Show up exactly at noon on the East Green. It is then and there that you will synchronize your watches, Doug will give you a final destination, and then you have about a half an hour to slowly meander though the park and very casually settle in at that location. At the predetermined time (for example 1:15 p.m.), you have to start laughing. That's it. Laugh your ass off! Once you start laughing, find someone else that's laughing and group up with them. Then group up with more chuckling chums, then more, and more, until it is one giant mass of hysterical people. The group will follow Weitz through the park for a few minutes to a final location, laughing all the way, and when the signal is given, you disperse and go about the rest of the day with a smile on your face. The wish, of course, is that the laughter will spread, attracting people who weren't part of the initial meeting on East Green.

Does it sound strange? Sure it does. It is strange. But it also airs on the side of brilliant. What makes the event even more impressive is that it is the brainchild of a 13-year-old boy. For the sake of anonymity, the name of the boy pulling the strings will not be released, but his story will be, because it's pretty cool. The boy is a member of Life Studio, an organization which offers transition coaching for kids, teens and the college bound. Weitz, founder of Life Studio, had been working with him in order to find a way to reignite his inspiration and discover something he was passionate about. Doug showed him a video called Frozen Grand Central (performed by a group called Improv Everywhere) where 207 people froze in mid-movement in Grand Central Station for five minutes, then unfroze and left like nothing ever happened. "This got him fired up in a real pure way," Weitz said. Step by step, the two began to hash out the entire LaughTour event. The boy even chose the spot where all the laughter will occur. They've also already planned a LaughTour in the Hamptons for August.

The energy and drive that created LaughTour is at the heart of Life Studio. Weitz had been an English teacher in the Bronx and East Hampton for years and in 2006, while tutoring a student, he realized he first needed to build a foundation of trust, then work from there, believing that if kids grow in character, self-reliance and self-confidence, all other aspects of their lives will also improve.

"In today's educational climate character education has fallen by the wayside in an era of testing," he said. "There aren't very many places that teach kids how to grow up to realize their unique potential." So Weitz began Life Studio to help kids realize they already possess all the tools they need to write their own narratives.

LaughTour is a huge chapter in one boy's life. It's time you pick up your own pen and write a few pages of your life. Get your giggle on, because a little laughter can go a long way.

Life Studio is run throughout Manhattan during the school year and based in the Hamptons throughout the summer months.

LaughTour starts at noon at the East Green in Central Park on May 3. For more information on LaughTour or transition coaching visit Life Studio at lifestudionyc.com.

Take a Hike with Ken Kindler

Paumanok Path Part V Through the Edge of the Core

The trail takes a left turn by Division Pond, and then a right turn onto an administrative road. Bear left and head north to cross CR 24 and then shortly cross Red Creek Road. Head up the Black Duck Lodge driveway, following the black owl blazes and the Paumanok Path (PP) blazes. Be alert for where the PP turns right, away from the driveway. The black owl blazes continue past the lodge. We are following just the white blazes now. After making the right turn, note the tidal wetlands of Hubbard's Creek to the left of the trail. Cross over a bridge built by scouts and after a little while turn left onto Red Creek Road. This road takes you over Hubbard's Creek. As you cross the culvert see if cattails still survive there, then turn right following the path back into the woods. At the first major intersection, you can turn left to take a short walk to Penny Pond. Faded blue owl blazes join the PP blazes. Follow them across Hildreth Road, a wide woods road. After passing a second bench, turn right and follow a yellow owl trail down to Old Squires Road. Turn left and follow the road and yellow owl blazes to turn right for a short walk through the woods behind the ball fields taking you back to the ample parking area.

At the edge of the Core, further northeast along Red Creek Road, we reach a 40.5 acre subdivision whose site plan is yet to be determined. According to the Central Pine Barrens Comprehensive Land Use Plan of 1995, this parcel, "Red Creek Site 3," is a "Critical Resource Area" within the compatible growth area. This open space is contiguous to the 50,000-acre Pine Barrens Core. I have guided Dan's Papers readers through 43 miles of trail (Red Creek; Sears Bellows; Hubbard Creek; Sarnoff; and the vast expanse of DEC and County lands beyond) many tens of thousands of acres of contiguous public open space lie to the west. Here the trail will follow an existing path along the southern ridge of a kettle, then hopefully through an easement on this subdivision, onto Red Creek Road near Squires Pond. At this point, development has pushed this regional initiative onto the road. From Red Creek Road the PP follows Newtown Road to the Shinnecock Canal. The Town has purchased much open space around Squires Pond. Camp Tekawitha on the north side of the Pond was recently preserved by the Town and will be a prime destination for a nature trail or over-night camping for the Paumanok Path. This trail may have to skirt this property to the north. Just south of Squires Pond, the Hadley House (Squires family 1700s) was purchased by Southampton Town. There is also a piping plover program nearby. It looks like Southampton Town is protecting as much as they can at the edge of the Core.

Bollard installed by State DOT.

Parking at Pleasure Drive, Flanders: the Flanders Presbyterian Church on CR 24 (Flanders Road) is immediately east of the Pleasure Drive / Flanders Road intersection. Drive south on Pleasure Drive until the road takes a sharp curve to the right (immediately after crossing power lines), and turn left into a small parking area with guardrail. Be careful not to block driveway.

From Sunrise Highway exit 64 North, immediate right from 104 North onto Pleasure Drive – 100 yards to parking area. Red Creek Park is located off Jackson Avenue in Hampton Bays – from Sunrise Highway "Exit 65N, 24 North, Riverhead." Travel north on CR 24 a couple hundred yards. You will see several signs before you bear right onto the turn lane for Old Riverhead Road West. Look for state police, Town of Southampton Jackson Avenue offices, and town police signs. Turn right onto Old Riverhead Road, pass the entrance to Southampton Town Police, and make the next left into the park. Where you turn into the park there is a blue and white sign, Town of Southampton Red Creek Park. Once on the road into the park, continue past the picnic areas and enter the last parking field to the right of the flagpole. Park by the small brown and yellow Southampton Town trails sign erected between a basketball court and a baseball diamond. Two hundred feet north along a fence is where the trail begins. There are diamond shaped yellow STPS owl blazes to mark the access trail to the Paumanok Path (about 1 mile north). There are pay phones and restrooms near the parking area.

This trailhead is hard to find, a kiosk would be helpful.

JUST FOR KIDS

Day Camps: An Important Part of a Child's "Village"

The familiar African proverb, "It takes a whole village to raise a child," expresses the complexities of child development in a simple way. Today, with children spending far less time with parents than in the past, their development is influenced by possibly hundreds of people, including teachers, counselors, professors and coaches.

Raising children properly is a community project, and one in which day camping plays a large role. Like so many other valuable learning experiences, day camps help equip children with skills they need to become happy, successful, contributing adults. Camps strive to develop positive self-esteem and nurture a child's sense of community. By emphasizing doing and learning, not final evaluation, camping experiences show that the act of trying, in and of itself, can be experienced as a success or accomplishment.

Day camps also provide ways for children to express themselves in a non-threatening, nurturing environment through a variety of sports, games, theater, crafts, nature projects, swimming, boating — as anyone who's ever been to a great camp knows, the possibilities are endless. Of course, development is more than physical growth. It is the process through which children mature socially, emotionally, intellectually and morally.

In addition to the many camps in the Hamptons where children can learn a variety of skills and have profound experiences that last a lifetime, a little farther west is the Brookhaven Country Day Camp, now celebrating its fortieth year. In 1968, my cousin Michael Pollack and I were just completing our first year as teachers. Avid campers from the age of seven, we decided to start our own day camp. We found a beautiful 7-acre piece of property on a lake. That has developed into a 24-acre camp with four swimming pools, ball fields, a hockey arena, indoor buildings, a travel program for teens and a child care center and preschool for children ages six weeks through five years of age.

That first summer began with just 35 campers, and ever since the camp's reputation and size have grown dramatically. In fact, Brookhaven has become one of the most respected programs in the camping industry, and its year-round preschool and childcare center has expanded and grown to become the first nationally accredited preschool in Suffolk County.

Many former campers, including those from that very first year, have sent their own children to Brookhaven, and a great number of campers have become counselors – some working with us for over 20 years. Brookhaven provides an atmosphere that fosters the development of skills and friendships, while creating memories that last a lifetime.

For more information about Brookhaven Country Day Camp, call (631) 924-4033.

CAMP ACCREDITED

Err, A Parent

Raising children, learning lessons By Susan M. Galardi

Art Appreciation

Raising a child on the East End, like raising a child anywhere, has its advantages and disadvantages. But at the risk of every family in New York subletting their condos and moving here in a mass exodus, I have to say that it's 99% incredible.

Photos by Susan M. Galardi

CMEE in Bridgehampton has to be one of the most extraordinary children's museums in the country, and the nature programs at SoFo are a blast – you want snapping turtles? You'll get snapping turtles, 45-pounders dragged right out of the pond. There are great events at the Parrish and all the libraries, including my favorite, the Amagansett Library where we've done cooking/chemistry experiments and seen awesome wild bird presentations – ducking for cover as a red tailed hawk flapped its wings three feet from our noses. For performing arts, there's the "Kidstreet" series, top notch kid's theater at WHBPAC, CMEE's summer series, plus school musicals galore.

Then there are the cool, funky things – like the jail at the Bridge Hampton Historical Society that Stacey Dermont so kindly opens at my son's request when we stop by. Visits to Quail Hill organic farm. And, yes, the most gorgeous sandbox in the world – the beaches of East Hampton.

But it's the unexpected small town moments that seal the deal for me. Last Thursday, the most glorious spring day of this year, my son and I took a scooter ride in the neighborhood before school. He saw an elegant gentleman with a straw hat walking up the road and said, "I want to meet that man." He scootered up, introduced himself and me, and asked the man his name and where he lived.

The man was Bill King, an East Hampton artist known for his tall, lanky metal structures – some 30 feet high. We were right in front of his house, where dozens of his sculptures intermingle organically with the bare trees, reaching to the sky. Hudson asked King if he'd teach him how to sculpt. King nodded – "when you're a little older" – and encouraged us to look in his workshop and anywhere on his property. "Walk all around. Anytime you like," he said, and continued on his walk.

We explored the grounds, racing from one sculpture to the next, giddy when we found works obscured among the trees. King's pieces range from whimsical to sensual; sweet to awesome. Some sculptures were in progress, some groupings were a lesson in variations on a theme. We were on an art hunt, with treasures at every turn.

Of course, after just a moment, I'd realized that I knew King's work. I see it everyday when I take my son to the East Hampton Pre-K. There, sitting on a cube base in a grassy circle in the parking lot, is a long, lean metal sculpture of a man, its legs reach out about 15 feet. And in its hands, a book.

Inside, I saw the school's director, Maureen Wykane, and told her about our adventure – the curiosity and interest it spurred in my son, asking if he could learn to sculpt and wondering how King made those elegant, static "robots." I asked Maureen if she knew the name of King's sculpture outside. Of course she did. It's called "The Learner."

Entertainment In Town

review: south pacific...by gordin & christiano

Bartlett Sher's staging of The Lincoln Center revival of Rodgers & Hammerstein's South Pacific is an enchanted evening of music and shimmering picture perfect post card images. As the five minute overture swells, the stage slides back to reveal a full 30-piece orchestra playing Robert Russell Bennett's lush original orchestrations of the beloved songs transporting us to another place and time for this sweeping romantic tale set on a tropical island in the middle of the South Pacific.

Sher's restrained naturalistic production is a stunning achievement and the first revival since South Pacific premiered at the Majestic Theatre in 1949 with Mary Martin and Ezio Pinza. The original, now considered a classic, ran for five years picking up numerous awards including nine Tonys and the Pulitzer Prize for Drama. The story of two love torn couples, written by Hammerstein and Joshua Logan, is based on James A. Michener's Pulitzer Prize winning novel Tales of the South Pacific, where American sailors were stationed during World War II. The main story concerns a US Navy nurse Nellie Forbush (Kelli O'Hara) from Little Rock, Arkansas and a French plantation owner Emile de Becque (Paulo Szot). The B-story focuses on Navy Airman Lt. Joseph Cable (Matthew Morrison) and a young, local Polynesian girl Liat (Li Jun Li). Their relationships will be challenged by the realities of the war and their own racial prejudices.

Sher directed the exquisite production of Adam Guettel and Craig Lucas's Light in the Piazza for Lincoln Center on the same Vivian Beaumont stage a few years ago. That production was a highlight of the season. As he did then, Sher makes magnificent use of the unique Beaumont stage giving the show a grand scaled physical production, this time a breathtaking panoramic of the idyllic island setting with Bali Hai looming in the distant sea and the glistening and changing sky above. Against this cinematic setting, the director has grounded the evening and the performances in the simple truth of the story, giving the characterizations an intimacy that is palpable and the songs a conversational quality like the inner ruminations of one's mind.

Sher has cast the musical perfectly. The leads, O'Hara and Szot, have lovely chemistry together. Her warm voice soars to the rafters especially during "A Wonderful Guy," and her version of "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Outta My Hair" is spirited good fun replete with a cartwheel. Szot, a Brazillian opera star making his Broadway debut, is a real find, a dashing matinee idol with charismatic presence and a rich baritone voice. His rendition of "This Nearly Was Mine" is thrilling . The two singers give us numerous reprises of "Some Enchanted Evening" that are simply breathtaking. The entire cast shines with impeccable work.

The show is clearly a period piece, but the themes of race, the morality of war, and how Americans relate to the world at large still resonate today, perhaps even more so in the light of the Vietnam War and the current war in Iraq. But the overriding unabashedly romantic feel drives the evening and Sher with his design team has lavished consummate care on every detail of this meticulous production.

South Pacific opened on April 3 at Lincoln Center's Vivian Beaumont Theater, 150 West 65th St. at Broadway. Tickets are available by calling telecharge at 212-239-6200 or online at let.org.

Tiffany Razzano's MINI – MOVIE REVIEWS

21 (PG-13)

Based on a true story, Ben Campbell (Jim Sturgess), an MIT student, is struggling to pay his tuition. His problem is solved when he is recruited by his math professor (Kevin Spacey) to join a group of students who are trained in the art of card counting in order to take Las Vegas casinos for millions.

88 Minutes (R)

On the eve of the execution of a serial killer he helped put on death row, Dr. Jack Gramm (Al Pacino), a college professor and forensic psychologist who works closely with the FBI, receives a phone call from someone telling him he has only 88 minutes to live. As he attempts to discover who is behind the phone calls, he finds himself investigating a copycat killer who is on the loose.

Baby Mama (PG-13)

In this comedy, Tina Fey stars as Kate Holbrook, a single, successful businesswomen who wants to have a child but learns she's infertile. When she meets working-class Angie (Amy Poehler), Kate decides Angie will be her surrogate mother. But when Angie comes knocking on Kate's door with no place to live, the mismatched pair become roommates for the duration of her pregnancy.

The Bank Job (R)

Based on a 1971 true-life robbery of a bank on Baker Street in London, two crooks (Jason Statham and Saffron Burrows) get away with a safety deposit box worth millions in cash and jewelry. However, the box also contains secrets that intertwine the duo with Britain's criminal underworld, the government and the Royal Family.

The Counterfeiters (R)

The true story of the largest counterfeit ring in history. In 1936, Salomon "Sally" Sorowitsch, an underworld counterfeiter, is thrown into a concentration camp, where he is handpicked by the Nazis to produce fake foreign currency in order to weaken the economy of Germany's enemies.

Deception (R)

Jonathan McQuarry (Ewan McGregor), an accountant, is introduced to an exclusive and anonymous sex club by a lawyer friend (Hugh Jackman). But the excitement of this new world quickly goes downhill when he becomes the prime suspect in a woman's disappearance as well as a multi-million dollar heist.

Forbidden Kingdom (PG-13)

After discovering in a pawn shop the antique staff that belonged to the legendary Monkey King (Jet Li), an American teen who is obsessed with kung fu unexpectedly travels in time to ancient China to help a group of warriors free the imprisoned king. Also starring Jackie Chan.

Forgetting Sarah Marshall (R)

From the producers of Knocked Up, struggling musician Peter Bretter (Jason Segel) deals with the heartbreak of being dumped by his TV star girlfriend Sarah Marshall (Kristen Bell) by taking an impromptu trip to Hawaii. Unfortunately, he is staying in the same hotel as Sarah and her new rocker boyfriend. But a resort employee (Mila Kunis) helps him keep his mind off his ex.

Horton Hears A Who! (G)

A lushly animated and extended version of the Dr. Seuss classic: the jovial elephant named Horton (Jim Carrey) hears a sound emanating from a grain on a flower, in which lives a tiny town named Whoville. It quickly becomes a race against sour kangaroos and greasy vultures to save this lint-sized discovery from annihilation. Wonderful!

Ironman (PG-13)

Robert Downey Jr. is given his chance to bring yet another comic book character to life. When wealthy industrialist and inventor Tony Stark (Downey) is kidnapped and forced to build a weapon that could cause immense devastation, he instead creates a high-tech suit of armor and escapes. He vows to use his suit to protect the world from evil.

Leatherheads (PG-13)

Dodge Connolly (George Clooney), a hero in America's pro-football league in 1925, is determined to save his team and the fledgling league from demise. After bringing in college football star Carter Rutherford (John Krasinski), Connolly finds himself competing with the young player for the affections of reporter Lexie Littleton (Renee Zellweger) as she tries to uncover the real scoop on Rutherford.

Married Life (PG-13)

In this 1940s period-piece, after falling in love with a much younger woman (Rachel McAdams), Harry (Chris Cooper) decides he must kills his wife Pat (Patricia Clarkson) because he can't bear the thought of hurting her when he leaves her. At the same time, he is vying with his best friend (Pierce Brosnan) for his girlfriend's affections.

Dan's HAMPTONS HOME & GARDEN SHOW Guide

It's Show Time!

I invite you to peruse this supplement, which serves as your handy guide to the 4th annual Hamptons Home & Garden Show. This three-day event is the most distinctive, elegant and high-end home show on Long Island. It has taken nearly a year to assemble the extraordinary line-up of exhibitors you'll be meeting on the expo floor. While exhibitors are coming from all over the tri-state area – and the nation as well – they all have one thing in common: they're serious about selling their products and services on the East End. They truly value your presence and really want your business and that's comforting to know in these challenging economic times.

It's all here for you, whatever phase of home improvement you are considering. We have what you need in order to prepare for the 2008 Hamptons summer season, whether you are planning to simply tint your windows or makeover your entire house. So, if you need a shot of inspiration or want to be juiced up by a plethora of home improvement ideas, we have it for you at the Southampton Elks Fairgrounds on County Road 39. Get ready to explore 17 acres of home improvement solutions. And you had better wear comfortable shoes!

14 Sensible Reasons You Should Come

1. It's fun to roam through the aisles of more than 200 eye-catching displays inside our 28,000 square foot, fully enclosed and carpeted tent. When you are done, there's another 20,000 square-feet outside, as well. It'll feel like shopping on Miracle Mile – the Hamptons home improvement version.

2. Get a free interior design consultation in the Designers Lounge. Bring your swatches and floor plans. And enjoy yourself.

3. Shop and compare with at least a couple of vendors in each product category. To paraphrase a popular banking TV commercial, when vendors compete for your business, you win.

4. It's a great chance to meet a handful of local, high-quality landscapers. Discuss your project and explore their creative pallitte in one visit, as they all vie for your business.

5. Find unique and rare products, ranging from statues, marble fireplaces and mantals, artisan custom-made furniture, garden antiques to unusual fish tanks, Persian rugs or fossilized paintings, to name just a few.

6. It's the best place to discuss your current energy footprint and how to save with alternative energy sources. Get practical advice on how to reduce your current oil, gas and electric bills. Meet the area's green whiz kids and the leading green builders, architects and suppliers.

7. Buy a raffle ticket for your chance to win a $2,500 shopping spree at Waldbaum's or the Food Emporium. If you win, it should hold you for six months. Does it get better than that?

8. An extraordinary chance to snatch a high quality, solar, green cottage – below the $75,000 market value – on Sunday at a 2 p.m. auction. Bring your checkbook, as it all goes to the American Heart Association. Have a heart!

9. Check out the NYS Comptroller's Office booth to see if you have any unclaimed funds. In prior years, one in three people that stopped by the booth got good news – and a check.

10. Pop into the coveted VIP tent, designed by Ligne Roset for New York Spaces magazine, any afternoon for a sampling of hard-to-find, exotic, specialty liquors from mondiliquor.com, as well as a tasting of delicious specialty foods from Waldbaum's. This will gear you up for the hippest summer outdoor entertaining.

11. You've been cooped up all winter. Get out and celebrate the first major event of the 2008 season. Meet and mingle. Don't be shy. It's about time.

12. Sit in on our highly rated how-to seminars, held in the theater on the expo floor. Our mistress of ceremonies, interior designer, columnist and radio talk show host Natalie Weinstein keeps the pearls of wisdom growing.

13. Time to get jazzed. Even our home improvement staples are higher-end and more compelling – from hi-tech kitchens, cutting edge security and the hippest audio-video systems, to well-built sunrooms, modular home extensions, outdoor pavers and slick outdoor furniture – I'm not even going to mention spending your tax refund/stimulus check here.

14. If you like attending hip, trendy parties and are "in the trade" (contractor, architect, real estate professional, celebrity, even B-level,) then stop by the Friday night Builders Bash and Welcome Reception (6:30-8 p.m.) and the Kentucky Derby Party on Sat, 4-7 p.m., hosted by First American Title Insurance.

So, it's all here for you on May 2-4, with convenient local resources, boundless ideas, rare finds, great bargains, doses of inspiration and the requisite fund-raisers and photo-ops. And the entire event is being made into a one-hour TV special by award-winning Hamptons TV-WVVH, which will air all weekend long on channel 78. How cool is that?

On behalf of the exhibitors and sponsors, speakers and hardworking team at the Hamptons Expo Group, I welcome you.

Enjoy and do support our exhibitors.

– Rick Friedman, President and Founder of the Hamptons Expo Group.

Dan's HAMPTONS HOME & GARDEN SHOW Guide

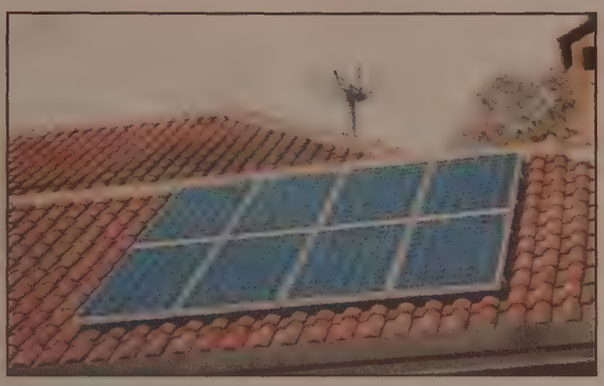
Let's Talk About Green



Anyone with an interest in green living has a treat in store at this year's Hampton Home & Garden Show. Sunday's presentation on Residential Green Building, Design, and Development promises to be a highlight for Expo attendees who are looking to learn more about environmentally conscious building and sustainable materials, or those who are just curious to learn about cutting edge ideas in architecture from a roster of top-tier industry leaders. Green building expert Charles Bergen of WDG Architects in Washington, D.C., will moderate a discussion between three of the most innovative eco-friendly builders on the east coast.

The event, which runs from noon to 2 p.m. on May 4th, will cover key ideas in sustainable architecture and development, along with a look at the financial aspects of going green. In addition to Bergen, the speakers will be Ric Stott of Southampton's Flynn + Stott Architects, and Chris Earley, a specialist in eco-smart civil engineering who will speak on storm water reduction systems and rainwater gardens, and developer Ari Meisel, who is spearheading the Watermill Ateliers project. All the speakers on Sunday will discuss their recent projects and take audience questions.

On the recent burst of consumer interest in sustainability, Ric Stott says, "I'm glad 'Green' has become a buzzword." The East End local has been drawn to environmentally conscious building since the 1970s, when he designed and completed his first solar house before training formally as an architect. From being part of the initial wave of interest in alternative energy sources, he has gone on to pioneer increasingly complex designs. For one recent project, his firm created a solar pool house, which uses sunlight not only to warm the pool, but also to pre-heat the boiler water for the main house, substantially cutting the energy usage of the residence as a whole.

An artist as well as a technician, Stott is committed to creating buildings that are as attractive as they are sustainable, and his work shows that the environmental benefits of green building needn't come at the cost of curb appeal. He feels that "home design is long overdue for a conscious, careful look at the synergies of efficiency and beauty," and finds his answer in creating sophisticated systems, which blend solar equipment directly into the infrastructure of the home. "I am committed to good design, and believe that building-integrated systems are the only way to make solar systems aesthetically pleasing and functional at the same time," says Stott. Long Island homeowners seem to agree with his philosophy, as in addition to designing new residential, municipal, and commercial buildings, the Flynn + Stott firm has spearheaded over 100 green renovations of existing structures.

Another panelist of particular interest to East End residents is Ari Meisel, the developer spearheading the Water Mill Ateliers project. The multi-use site will include 8,000 sq. ft of office space alongside affordable housing residences, and is expected to be the second LEED Platinum certified building in the state. Meisel will also discuss his popular green building blog (http://leedpro.blogspot.com), which gets over 1,000 hits per day.

Charles Bergen will start things off at noon with an introduction to green homes and the LEED rating system, which determines a green building's eligibility for tax rebates. Chris Earley will join him at 12:30 p.m. to discuss rain and storm water reuse systems suitable for homes and businesses. Ric Stott will talk on solar energy at 1 p.m., and Ari Meisel will close the panel with his presentation at 1:30 p.m.

Dan's HAMPTONS HOME & GARDEN SHOW Guide

Why You Should Buy the Green Cottage

One visitor to the Hamptons Home and Garden Show will come away from the event with much more than just ideas and contacts for building and improving his or her house. The highest bidder at a live auction held at the event will walk away with a 192-square-foot "green" cottage that can be used as a pool house, art studio, meditation room, or children's playroom. The winner doesn't have to literally walk away with the cottage – as part of the deal it will be delivered and installed.

Cold Spring Harbor-based architect Anthony J. Musso, who specializes in green design, designed the cottage. Last year he exhibited a similar cottage that was also auctioned off, with the proceeds being donated to the Children's Foundation of Suffolk. This year the cottage is slightly bigger and the proceeds will be donated to the American Heart Association, and all the materials and labor were donated. The value of the cottage is approximately $75,000 and the bidding will start at $10,000, said Musso.

What makes the cottage green? For starters the electricity is generated using solar panels and the roof is constructed with artificial slate tiles that are made from recycled rubber and plastic. The decking and a pergola were constructed with Forest Stewardship Council-certified wood that has been responsibly harvested. The shell of the building is made with expanded polystyrene SIP panels, which provide a super insulated thermal barrier. And the exterior siding is made of cement and wood fiber, another material used in green design because of its longevity and low environmental impact.

There is no plumbing in the cottage, said Musso, though it could be added at a later date. The interior is painted buttercup yellow with white trim. The exterior is off-white and the roof has an appropriately green hue. The cottage will be delivered to the winner's property, though it will be the winner's responsibility to prepare an area, which could involve removing planting or leveling the ground. Because of the cottage's small size and relatively light weight, Musso said there's no need for a full foundation.

Musso said he's been focusing on green design projects for the past six years, though green design has really taken off the past two to three years. As public education and consciousness is raised about environmentally friendly building, local laws have been changing to embrace higher environmental standards. Energy Star, a program of the U.S. Department of Energy and the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, has been urging towns to embrace a set of standards they set for efficiency in building.

One hurdle for people considering building a green house from scratch or making green renovations to an existing home is the perception that building green means spending more green. Building a house that is 30 to 50% more efficient will be almost a trade off to a conventionally built house, said Musso. There will be additional expenses for some materials, but these expenses will be offset because smaller equipment for heating, cooling and so forth can be used.

A house that's 50 to 90% more efficient than a conventionally built house will cost more to build, said Musso, but those costs are offset down the road by savings in water, electricity, heating and cooling bills.

So it's time to start thinking about where a new green cottage could go. Between the green design and the proceeds of the auction being donated to charity, it's a win-win situation. And imagine how great it would be to have a small separate space away from the house for chilling out, painting, yoga, or letting the kids take over.

– Leslie Banker

The green cottage auction will be held on Saturday, May 3 at 2 p.m. Viewing times are Friday, May 2 from 3-7 p.m. & Saturday, May 3 from 10 a.m.-2 p.m. at Hamptons Home & Garden Show, Southampton Elks Lodge Fairgrounds, 605 County Road 39 (Route 27), Southampton. Home Sweet Green

As environmental issues like global warming continue to find their way to the forefront of the media, more and more people are interested in building eco-friendly and green homes.

"Not only are clients ready to look for [green homes], but the builders are also starting to recognize the benefit as well," said John Barnes, president of the East End chapter of the Long Island Builders Institute, adding that many builders already utilize green practices without even realizing it. "Many are already 75 percent of the way towards building green. It's about best practices. It's not just about the material you use. It's how you put it together."

Barnes also noted that though green building has been common in other areas of the country for years, the trend has only started to make waves on Long Island over the last year or so.

Several Long Island towns – including Riverhead and Southampton – have passed legislation requiring newly constructed homes to meet federal Energy Star standards, calling for extra insulation, more efficient heating and cooling systems and the use of energy saving appliances. East Hampton and other towns will follow suit within the next year. Barnes applauds the towns' efforts, but said, "It deals only with energy consumption. It's a huge component of green building, but green building goes beyond Energy Star."

Figuring out how green you're going to make your home starts at the very beginning, when you plan not only how your house will be built, but you also determine what kind of environmental impact the finished product will have. This design phase is key, says Barnes, as "90 percent of a green house is built" at this time.

People also have the misconception that building a green home will cost them a lot of money, sometimes even expecting figures as much as 20 percent more than the cost of a regular home. This simply isn't true, says Barnes, who says a green home should only cost a homeowner 2 to 5 percent more. And, because of savings on heating and electricity bills, this difference will be paid back over time.

One of the least expensive things a homeowner can do is to better insulate their homes using foam insulation. This also happens to have the biggest payback. Foam insulation does a better job of keeping air from filtering into a house than regular insulation, which causes a home's heating use and, ultimately, costs to rise. "It's conserving energy rather than looking for an alternative source," Barnes said.

Another common green practice is installing windows with a special glazing that, depending on the climate, will either reflect or trap heat. On Long Island, this glass will keep heat in on colder days. But in a place like Phoenix, heat will be reflected, keeping the home cooler.

Installing a geothermal heat pump is another way to save some money while saving the environment. During cooler months, a geothermal pump will absorb heat from the ground and use it to heat your home. Then, during the warmer summer months, this pump can take the heat from your home and transfer it back into the ground. While a geothermal heat pump will cost more than a normal furnace or boiler (anywhere from $1,000 to $1,500 per ton of capacity,) it's worth it, said Barnes. "The payback is in about five years," he said, saying he's even heard stories of it taking less time. "And they can last up to 20 years. So that's quite a bit of operative savings."

People are also becoming more creative with the types of renewable materials they use in their homes. Flooring can be made from bamboo, which grows back more quickly than regular trees. There are companies making countertops from recycled glass and concrete. There are also companies making insulation from recycled blue jeans and soybeans.

"It's very creative," Barnes said, "but it's also based on some pretty good science, too. It's about how energy is used and how moisture moves within a building. It's a mixture of science and creativity."

Now, as you move forward with building your dream green home, or remodeling your old home to fit green practices, it's important that you don't become overwhelmed by all of the possibilities. "Start in small steps," Barnes said. "You don't have to go for the homerun with fancy practices. Just start with well thought out building practices."

A Bottle of Red, A Bottle of White

Hamptons homeowners are a privileged lot. To us, a 3,000-square-foot house seems small while a pool and tennis court are almost expected. Those who are finally able to craft their humble East End abode want to add the stuff they've always dreamed of – bowling alley, screening room, elevator, a home gym. Amenities abound in the land of the fabulous and fat-of-wallet.

One popular amenity in Hamptons homes is the wine cellar, the prized possession for those who find wine a passion, or even a hobby. With a sophisticated lifestyle comes a sophisticated palate. More often than not, the typical customer is not a raging connoisseur. "Almost every house going up out there has a wine cellar," said Linda Brown, of Custom Wine Cellars, a Cincinnati-based company that does work all over the Hamptons. "It expands your ability to entertain."

One doesn't have to be a collector to have a cellar though. "People who want wine cellars tend to be fun people who do fun things," she said. "It's like having any other room in the house."

Brown knows her stuff. She designed the cellars for the Hamptons Designer Showhouses in 2006 and 2007, with the 2006 cellar having a capacity for 3,500 bottles.

The company constructs the simplest cellars to the more elaborate, from very utilitarian designs to cellars with exotic woods and finishes, grapevine base molding, carvings – the whole gamut. For most, a cellar will be a very important space where a lot of time will be spent. A wine cellar also increases the value of the home.

As for size, an average cellar is 8' x 10' or 11' x 11', slightly bigger than a small bedroom. One cellar Brown just built in a Hamptons home was 24' x 22' – with a price tag of $200,000. There's a misconception too that the walls of a wine cellar should be lined with cedar. "That's for keeping the moths out of your sweaters," Brown laughed. Different woods can be used, but cedar is not one of them.

Brown's clients sometimes feel somewhat overwhelmed by the whole process. The benefit is that she can do everything for them, presenting first color renderings of the project, providing lighting, racks and installation.

By far, the most crucial element in the construction of the cellar is to make sure the temperature of the room is maintained between 55 and 57 degrees Fahrenheit, and kept at 55 to 75 percent relative humidity. "Most important is to avoid fluctuation in temperature. That's what kills wine," said Brown.

The right kind of insulation – on the floor, walls, and ceiling – has to be installed. Concrete walls are fine, but since it's not the most attractive material, the walls can be made nicer by applying stucco, or the newer, narrower thin bricks that are so popular now. Brown also consistently encounters clients who want a cellar that's large enough for a table and chairs, but she advises them against that, since an average of 56 degrees isn't exactly comfortable. "I tell them, unless you want to dine with your coats on, not to do it!"

After the cellar is built, it's time to stock.

Proper storage is the most important factor. "And be practical," Brown said, advising to accommodate for the growth that's sure to happen. "I tell clients to consider what they think they'll buy and add 25 percent. People who already collect wine, who travel, know to anticipate."

For those who don't, Brown offers advice on purchasing and storage, whether the client will like wine slots, or cases, large format bottles or small. A typical 8' x 10' cellar will hold 1,200 to 1,300 bottles.

The whole process takes about six to eight weeks, and Brown says people should think conservatively once they decide on a design. "You want to make sure you're happy in the end. Think of what your needs are. You don't want to rush this."

Would she call a wine cellar a luxury item? "Well, in the Hamptons, it's almost standard."

The Finished Basement: Subterranian Paradise

Transforming the basement from a smelly, scary spider den into a haven for fun and games is an excellent way to increase the value of a home. A finished basement could provide an extra family room, a playroom for kids, a television or video game room, or an apartment that can be rented to a tenant – and it can be accomplished at a relatively low cost with little hassle. There is really no reason not to do it, and these days many homebuilders are including finished basements as part of the original construction.

It is important to hire a professional to handle this job. Renovating a basement yourself can be tricky and is a lot different than, say, renovating your living room. "Redoing your basement the right way not only adds value to your house, at the same time it makes a great living space for your family. You have to make sure that it is done the right way with the proper insulation and moisture proofing," said Tim Dalene of Telemark Construction.

The first step in finishing a basement is to get rid of the cement flooring and walls that surround the area. Separate yourself from the misguided logic that a basement is a part of your house that is not supposed to be enjoyed. Cement floors can be padded and carpeted. Even hardwood flooring can be laid down on top of a cement floor, and the walls of a basement can be covered with drywall and then painted to make for a very attractive room. It may sound easy, but it isn't that simple because moisture and water are big obstacles. "Water and mold is your enemy when it comes to renovating your basement," said Tim White of Tim White Construction.

If your basement isn't yet renovated, look at it as an opportunity to add value to your home, not as a place for storage.

You should never decide to turn your basement into a functional part of the house without redoing the floors and walls. This is the most expensive part of finishing a basement, but also the most necessary. Expect to clear out the entire area of the basement during the construction phase. A builder will likely begin the process by first moisture proofing the basement walls, followed by installing the sub floor. From there, the contractor will frame the walls, rooms and ceiling and install insulation with vapor barriers. All of the electrical and plumbing will also have to be inspected. Next, the drywall is installed and primed for painting. Then the flooring, trim, baseboards and light fixtures are installed. The last thing, of course, is to paint the walls.

If you are planning on turning a basement into a television room and want to make it luxurious, call Chris Brody, of Crescendo in Southampton, is an expert at installing home theater systems that will blow you away. He uses top of the line flat screens and audio equipment to turn rooms into little movie theaters that are as elegant and posh as you'd like. They are also a local company with an excellent reputation for home theater installation.

Setting up games in your basement is also an excellent and fun way to keep it an actively used room. Ping-pong tables always go over well, but if you've always wanted a pool table in your home, a renovated basement is a great spot to put that as well. Some people also use their renovated basements as workout areas, setting up full fitness studios complete with exercise machines, weights, wall-sized mirrors and punching bags. When it comes to basements, there is no end to what you can do.

Choosing a Roofing Contractor? Take CARE

If you're like most homeowners, the biggest fear about selecting the right roofing contractor is knowing if they're really qualified to do the best job with the best materials available in today's market. You want to know the insurance you carry is going to cover your expenses. When it comes to roofing, cost is also a consideration, but it should be secondary to getting the best possible job by the most highly qualified contractor bidding on your roof project.

When it comes to roofing your home, the old saying, "penny wise and pound foolish" applies when selecting a contractor strictly based on cost. There are a lot of ways you can cut costs, but your roof system should not be one of them.

After all, it is your roof that protects everything you own, just ask anyone who has experienced a roof leaking onto his dining room table or living room couch. Remember, you probably don't drive the cheapest car, wear the cheapest clothes or watch the cheapest TV, so why would you hire the cheapest roofing contractor? GAF Elk's Master Elite roofing contractors are factory trained certified installers that are using the very best roofing products available on the market today. They take pride in having their crews annually trained in the best installation techniques offered by GAF Elk's CARE training professionals. CARE stands for the Center for Advancement of Roofing Excellence and is the only training facility of its kind in the industry.

Master Elite installers are the only contractors that can offer GAF Elk's Golden Pledge Warranty which gives the homeowner 15-50 years of coverage and 100% peace of mind coverage against all potential material defects as well as 15-20 year coverage and 100% peace of mind coverage against possible faulty installation and workmanship. This is possible because as part of your Golden Pledge Warranty, a factory certified inspector from GAF Elk comes to your home after every job is completed and does a 40 point inspection of your roof to make sure it was done to the manufactures specifications using the best materials available. Only after the Master Elite installation passes this rigorous inspection is the warranty released to the homeowner, thereby insuring that the roof materials and workmanship are done to the manufacturer's exacting standards.

When a job is completed, the homeowner enjoys a new roof that has been inspected and backed by a $3 billion company in business since 1886. So even if your contractor goes out of business you are covered 100% by the manufacturer.

That's value for your roofing dollar. So, if you are in the market for a new roof be sure to contact anyone of a number of qualified Master Elite Contractors in your area and inquire about the Golden Pledge Warranty; you will be glad you did. GAF Elk is North America's largest roofing manufacturer and is quality you can trust.

Dan's HAMPTONS HOME & GARDEN SHOW Guide

Once Upon a Mattress

If you suffer from chronic sleep loss, rest easy (no pun intended), because you're not alone. Surveys and research show that most of us don't get enough sleep, and it has been proven that chronic sleep loss often leads to bad moods, safety risks, weight gain, cardiovascular disease and other health problems. And although there are many causes of sleep deprivation, the solution to sleepless nights could be simpler than you thought – you may just need a new mattress.

Or maybe you do get the recommended eight hours of sleep a night. But combined with the time also spent in bed reading, watching TV or whatever else, it's possible that about a third of your day is spent on your mattress.

Either way, it's important to sleep on a quality mattress that suits your specific needs.

When choosing a mattress, there are several basic factors to consider. First, if you suffer from allergies or respiratory disease, make sure the material covering the mattress doesn't make you sick. Some mattress coverings also could irritate the skin, so it's extremely important to make sure that anything you sleep on, including mattress pads and linens, doesn't cause aggravation.

The ideal firmness of a mattress depends on the individual. If you prefer a firm mattress, choose a spring mattress, as non-spring mattresses tend to be too soft, and may be harmful to your back. But if you prefer a soft mattress, keep in mind that if a bed is too soft it probably isn't giving you enough support. It may feel like a fluffy, comfortable marshmallow at first, but could result in severe shoulder, hip, neck and back problems in the long run. Also note that the more coils a mattress has, the more support it'll give you. If you're overweight, choose a mattress with high quality springs because it will extend the life of the mattress.

No matter which mattress you choose, it's important to turn it over every 2-3 months. It is also important to replace it every 5-7 years because over time, a mattress collects dust mites and dirt, which could cause serious health problems.

When it comes to mattresses, there have been so many technological advancements and innovations in the last decade, so testing out different brands and styles of mattresses is the best way to find "the one." And because a mattress is an important investment, it's a good idea to seek expert advice. Fortunately, the "mattress professionals" at Sleepy's take the guesswork out of buying a mattress. They work with customers to find the best mattress for their needs, and will meet competitor prices on major brands. Sleepy's showrooms display a variety of mattresses in all sizes and price ranges for customers to try, and there are five locations on the East End alone including East Hampton, Bridgehampton, Hampton Bays and two in Southampton. Sleepy's also will be exhibiting at the Hamptons Home & Garden Show, so if you have questions, stop by their booth May 2-4 to talk to a mattress professional.

Paint: Reinventing the Color Wheel

Whoever imagined paint could be reinvented?

Yet that is exactly what Benjamin Moore has done with the development of Aura. Three years in the making, it was introduced this past year and has earned an impressive number of kudos in the process, including Popular Science magazine's 2007 Best of What's New Award. In fact, according to experts, Aura represents such a giant leap in paint technology that it's been described as the most innovative breakthrough in paint since the introduction of latex in the 1950s.

How, exactly, is this new interior paint so different from any other? Aura is a 100 percent, acrylic-based paint featuring a waterborne colorant system. But, any similarities to other paints end there, because it relies on ColorLock, a proprietary patent-pending technology. ColorLock eliminates the problem of the colorant inhibiting the performance of paint, and, in fact, helps to yield an ultra-premium coating where the color is literally embedded in the binding agent.

The results are a checklist of unparalleled advantages. First, Aura is self-priming on most surfaces, requiring no more than two coats – no matter the color, no matter the sheen. And, the depth of color that it delivers also is historic. Second, once the paint is applied, it dries extraordinarily fast and is virtually odorless, which means within hours after painting a room, you can host a party with no telltale signs that interior painting was just completed. Add to the list that there's also virtually no color rub off, and it's unrivaled when it comes to durability, washability and stain, water, and color fade resistance.

With today's sensitivity to the environment, Aura's eco-friendly nature is another plus. Its very low volatile organic compound (VOC) formulation – under 50 grams per liter – exceeds the country's strictest VOC regulatory requirements while delivering exceptional performance. And, because the colorants are waterborne, with none of the solvents found in other color systems, there are no additional VOCs introduced into the product when colorant is added, as is the case with other paints.

While Aura is sustainable "green," the color green is just one of more than 3,400 color choices available. In fact, with the rollout of its new paint species, Benjamin Moore also added 144 new colors – the Affinity palette – its first new color offering in six years. It's a range of 144 highly sophisticated hues that are all uniquely harmonious, ensuring that whatever colors you select, they all are compatible and work together.

"In developing Aura, it's been proven that not all paint is created equal," said Carl Minchew, the company's director of color technology. "It is the next generation of paint, formulated to provide the highest quality finish for those who demand only the best in their interior spaces. Aura is, quite simply, the finest paint Benjamin Moore has ever made."

Look for Aura Exterior, due out this spring. It, too, has ultra-performance and low-VOC properties that make it superior to conventional house paint.

The Art of Investing in Art

While some investors are getting cold feet about jumping into various market segments, the art world is booming. But those looking to get started in the world of art shouldn't get caught up simply with the numbers.

Investing in art may be one of the most confusing pastimes. A man who splatters paint on an oversized canvas? Adults who draw with crayons? Or cut shapes out of cardboard? To the average person, purchasing pieces like these doesn't make sense. And if that's the case, then he or she shouldn't buy them.

The first rule of collecting art is to buy something you like. There is no reason to spend tens of thousands of dollars on something you are going to keep in storage because you cannot bear to look at it or, even worse, shudder every time you gaze at your wall. You will surely be able to find something that meets your aesthetics in the same price range.

If the inheritance has just kicked in and you've decided to invest your money in art, but haven't a clue where to start or don't have any notion of what you like, you should really start with the basics. Visit museums and galleries, pick up some art anthologies, and even attend an art appreciation class. The knowledge you have when you begin a collection will be reflected in the actual collection.

"Gouache Number 5" by Lee Krasner

Mark Borghi of Borghi Fine Arts in Bridgehampton and Manhattan has some great advice about starting a collection – know what you want, know whom you are buying from and when you find a dealer whom you respect and trust, stick with them. They can help you continue establishing your collection. Also, buy American. "American paintings have great upswing," he explained.

Borghi's other recommendation is to stay away from auctions, because the auction market is insane right now. Blue Chip artists are out of most people's range, but even lesser known artists are selling at prices that exceed their quality. Therefore, most dealers have shied away from purchasing art at auctions and so should you. This is especially true of contemporary artists, who are experiencing inflated values of their work, which may not hold.

If the inheritance didn't just kick in, this doesn't mean you have to wait until you've got a million in the bank to start buying art. Start like many artists have, with works on paper. You can get some great pieces in the $10,000 to $15,000 range and for a little more de Kooning's works on paper start around $40,000. It may seem like a lot of money, but when you consider that his "Untitled XXX" painting sold for $10.6 million at an auction, it's a drop in the bucket.

The trick is to buy the best your money can buy.

Benjamin Moore®

Aura®

BENJAMIN MOORE has crafted a paint designed to unleash your creative freedom. Aura paint untethers you from the boundaries of conventional paints, freeing you to manifest your ARTISTIC VISION into a REALITY.

Imagine the flexibility to use ANY COLOR, IN ANY SHEEN, ANYWHERE in a paint that is also ECO-SENSITIVE. Bring On The Bling

It's all in the family for Ken and Sarah Burns and son Michael.

OK, that might sound like a cliché but it really is. This May 2, 3 and 4 they will be exhibiting at the Hamptons Home and Garden Show. "We can't wait to come up. It's going to be exciting," said Michael.

The business of the Burns clan, Benchmark of Palm Beach, is to buy and sell antique jewelry, that's from the Georgian period on up the 60s and 70s with the majority of their inventory being Georgian, Edwardian, Victorian, and Art Deco. Their travels take them to New York, where they put things up for auction or attend a show of the major auction houses, as well as around the country looking for new and unusual items. Ken started his business 30 years ago and he and wife Sarah usually are the ones who make the trips to attend trade shows such as this one.

"It's a lot of fun," says Ken of the day-to-day. "There's always something new." Somebody has to mind the store, so Michael stays and tends to business back home.

The Home and Garden Show is one of two other Hamptons shows the family partakes in. HHG is divided into three separate components – the Building and Remodeling Expo, the Design and Décor Expo, and the GreenHamptons Pavillion, all under one roof. This year, they will be one of 330 booths and an estimated 5,000+ attendees. Held over three days, Show Director Rick Friedman has made it a destination for builders, decorators and homeowners for four years in a row now.

You might be thinking that a home and garden show might be an unlikely place for a jewelry company to display their wares, but Benchmark takes advantage of the related industries. After all, if you're sprucing up your home, why not spruce yourself up in the process? Other related companies, such as the Animal Rescue Fund of the Hamptons and Gabrielsen Florist, are there. Everything that's in and around the home seems to be able to be a part.

Ken is a gemologist and has always been a lover of jewelry. He started early on working for other jewelry companies and at one point was the head of the estate department of one of the major jewelry stores before deciding to go into business for himself. Sarah has always assisted him and became a vital component of the company in the early 90s. Originally from Boca Raton, the Burns family all now make their home in Blueridge, a small town north of Atlanta, where they've lived for just under three years and where they maintain a retail store.

"I saw my father going out and dealing with beautiful rare objects," said Michael of his reasons to follow his father into the family business. "It has to be something you have a passion for." The allure of such beautiful objects won him over. None of them have one period they are fond of, or one look that dominates their process when choosing what to buy. "I guess we all kind of look to my father because he has the greatest accumulation of knowledge," confessed Michael, "but there is no one facet – no pun intended – that we gravitate toward. You have to be open-minded toward it all." Now he has people turning to him for his expertise and with items for sale, many commercially produced pieces but many dazzling ones as well. Customers can also turn to Benchmark if they are in need of repair or an appraisal.

Earthly Delights

Going Native

Native plants are in high demand now as people want to lower their landscape maintenance costs and town planning regulations and building codes require more natural buffers, conservation easements and re-vegetation areas. But few people understand what a native plant is, and others wonder, after having done all their research based on lists they got from the town, where they can buy these materials.

A plant is native if it grows in the forests, fields or wetlands in the region. Over the years, through horticultural hybridization, many native plants have been selected for their good qualities which include beautiful flowers, strong root structures, rapid growth habit, or shade or drought tolerance. Those plants have been improved, giving us so many wonderful cultivars of maples and dogwoods. Other native plants have simply been introduced into the rich and well cared for landscape environment and have proliferated way beyond the point that they could have achieved in their natural locations.

So clearly choosing native plants that are well suited to your landscape – be it beach, pond side, old farm field or oak woods – means doing a little research into what will thrive versus merely survive.

Brooklyn Botanic Gardens (BBG) has a wonderful book, Native Alternatives to Invasive Plants, that quickly and concisely explains the importance of native plants and the issues surrounding popular trees, shrubs and perennial introductions that we have all invited into the garden over the years, but that have become problem plants. Some of them, like the notorious purple loosestrife, are natives that have simply been overused and have escaped the bounds of the watery environment that they need, thanks to rich soil and irrigation in flower gardens. Autumn olive and some large maple varieties, on the other hand, were planted for their salt tolerance or growth, both qualities that have allowed these trees to spread explosively. They have in effect become invasive weeds that you spend time pulling out of the garden and that crowd out other plants.

Native Alternatives offers wonderful choices in plant material that you may already see if you look around your neighborhood. Paulownia tomentosa is everywhere. The tall racemes of purple flowers are breaking bud now, and the large heart shaped leaves will come out after the flower. There are several old ones on Wykapogue Road that have generously spread their saplings around town. You may have noticed a seedling pop up on your property somewhere. They have enormous leaves, up to 14 inches across, that are fuzzy on the underside. The stems are fuzzy too. Some people like to cut the saplings down every year to keep the bold look of the new leaves. A wonderful old example of this can be seen at Madoo, Bob Dash's garden in Sagaponack. But if they go to flower and then fruit, the Paulownia can spread seeds throughout the neighborhood.

Native Alternatives recommends using a Northern Catalpa instead of the Paulownia, and for

On The Fence

It's time to start thinking about the garden – and that doesn't just mean how lush and weed-free the grass is or whether to try tomatoes again this summer. It also means planning the outdoor space with the proper fences and gates to make the yard both look its best and be as functional as possible.

The first thing to think about is what the fence needs to accomplish. Michael Marran, owner of East Hampton Fence, lists a number of reasons for installing a fence or a gate, including keeping the deer out, child safety around pools, blocking the sound of a busy road, creating privacy, containing fly-away balls around a tennis court, keeping dogs contained, and sectioning off an outdoor patio. "A good way to think about it is like creating outdoor rooms," he said.

The choices are nearly endless. Some fences are finished on one side, which means the reverse side will be, well, unfinished. A fence finished on both sides is more expensive but more attractive from more angles. "Sometimes homeowners who share a property line will split the cost of a double-sided fence," said Marran.

To muffle the sound of a busy road, Marran said the best bet would be to build a brick wall, which is quite expensive. A fence with sound absorbing material sandwiched between two wooden exterior layers is more economical, works well, and also is an equally attractive option.

The material a fence is made with will determine its look, cost, longevity and how much maintenance it requires. Lately, said Marran, they've been installing quite a few fences made with a composite wood product that has recycled materials in it. While this option is more expensive than a regular wood fence, it will last approximately twice as long (about 30 years), be more stable thus less likely to warp, and it will also require less maintenance as it resists moisture and holds paint better than wood. In green design it is products such as this, which are made using recycled materials and don't have to be replaced often, that are favored.

There are also low maintenance fences made with PVC that come in a variety of styles. Marran explained that some styles are better than others – some look a little shiny.

And then there are the deer fences, which need to be about eight-feet high and require a cattle grate or an electric fence at the driveway. The result – an un-nibbled garden – is often worth the effort for a homeowner.

What is one of the more difficult fencing challenges? Marran said it is containing dogs – they tend to dig under a fence and jiggle gate latches.

Besides the frequently seen picket fences and the traditional six-foot tall privacy fences, there also are more modern styles. For contemporary houses, there are fences made with cable or wire. Instead of vertical slats, a fence can have hori-

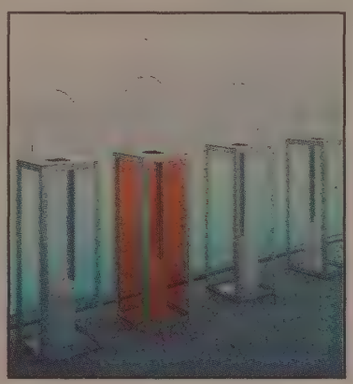
Extending the Indoors Out

The onset of summer marks the exciting return to outdoor dining. Suddenly, your backyard needs to become a great room, dining room, kitchen and den. The best way to turn your backyard into a beautiful, summer guest-ready hangout is to simply add a few pieces of the right outdoor furniture and accessories. With Hamptonites and designers becoming increasingly creative and innovative with exterior design, there is a bevy of new options for decorating your yard.

The first look is a chic, modern beach look. Nothing says mod and sexy like giant candles in your backyard. Designer du jour Gandia Blasco, based in Spain and creator of uber-hip, but fully functional and interesting-looking outdoor furniture, has created plexi glass and aluminum outdoor candles that come in vertical sizes up to 16 x 16" (smaller ones are 8 x 8") and horizontal sizes up to 8 x 8" and 24-inches-high. If you are ready to make a real statement – and have a large backyard – you might want to go for the giant candles, which are 16 x 16" horizontally and 40 inches high. The candles come in sleek orange, calming teal or a very sexy, translucent white called "frozen." The candles will look great next your '80s-esque white outdoor couches and lounge chairs. The overall effect will be a summery, if not downright classy, modernized Caribbean look.



Farol Vertical Laterns by Gandia Blasco

A more classic approach to outdoor designing is using the right wood that fits with the Frank Lloyd Wright–inspired outdoor/indoor synthesis. This second look is a bit more masculine, but still quite summery. Batavia Sophisticated Outdoor Furniture, based in New Jersey, sells Westminster Teak's wooden furniture, which is excavated from the jungles of Indonesia. The dining sets and loungers come with a lifetime guarantee, securing a long-lasting look of authenticity. The wooden bar set is a unique and interesting look for a Hamptons backyard bash. The wood was even voted as best overall outdoor wooden furniture by The Wall Street Journal. It looks clean, authentic and is perfect for families.

If you want neither a sexy, chic beach look nor authentic, masculine look, perhaps an architectural, industrial look will recreate your backyard. Rollner Architectural Metals makes outdoor chairs, tables and couches that are thin and silver, for a very sleek and minimalist look. This can create a sophisticated yet simple backyard. He complements his thin-cut, exactly carved and meticulous-looking metals with white or navy cushions, which provide comfort and color. The unique furniture is available at Tides Home in Brooklyn.

The Modular Sectional Sofa by Gandia Blasco

Whether it's beach chic, classic wood or industrial mod, the backyard becomes the most important area of design and leisure over the summer. Creating the perfect yard is a daunting task, but with the right designers and furniture pieces, your backyard can become the best room in the house. Or, rather, outside the house!

Dive Into Summer – East End's Swimming Pool Gurus

With summer just around the corner, it's perfectly natural to daydream about an afternoon spent lounging poolside. Innovative ideas and technologies in pool design and maintenance are popping up all over, just in time to take any Long Island backyard in a cool, new direction before the summer starts. These local companies handle small-scale upgrades, large-scale overhauls, and create installations from scratch, all while riding the cutting edge of this year's latest consumer trends in pools and spas.

Jack Anthony offers services ranging from regular weekly maintenance visits to luxury designs and renovations that incorporate waterfalls, whirl pools and other specialty features. During its three-and-a-half decades on Long Island, the company has garnered steady praise from local customers and the pool industry community. Swimming pools by Jack Anthony have been honored in National Spa and Pool Association Design & Build competitions at both regional and international levels, earning seven gold awards and 16 silver awards over the past three years alone. The company's projects have also received recognition in the national press, with photo spreads in Aqua Magazine and Pool & Spa News. An image gallery of pools and spas that have received the Jack Anthony treatment, as well as contact information for the branches in Southampton, Huntington and East Moriches, is available at jackanothony.com.

Like Jack Anthony, Specht-Tacular Pools in Medford is family-owned and operated, and both companies take pride in doing high-end work without the use of subcontractors. Owner Dieter Specht said his company shines at "customized jobs with negative edges, chute ascents, sun decks, everything you can imagine," and that luxury work is a particular focus for the firm. He added, "We specialize in very difficult terrain." In addition to design know-how and the ability to transform a tough landscape into a peaceful oasis, the company offers a full range of pool maintenance tools, including gentle, salt-based chlorine generators for swimmers in search of softer water. Specht-Tacular has enjoyed a presence on Long Island for 12 years and serves customers in Suffolk and Nassau. To look at photos of the company's past work, including kidney, roman end and lagoon-style pools, visit specht-tacular.com or call (631) 696-3900.

Blue Haven Pools, a national company with a local office in East Setauket, offers pools with an exclusive range of health-conscious equipment, including the SmartPur filtration system. Installing a SmartPur package can offer up to an 80% reduction in a pool's chlorine levels, and cut the need for algaecides by as much as 95%. To accomplish these goals, the array of processes Blue Haven uses includes electrolytic conversion of natural salt, ozonation techniques similar to those used to purify bottled water and controlled releases of silver and copper to balance pool pH. Blue Haven also offers the eco-friendly SmartMax StarPump, which employs an energy efficient, advanced fluid dynamic design that minimizes the amount of electricity used by the pool it maintains. Blue Haven installs and renovates in-ground pools, has served over 250,000 customers in 25 states, and has been ranked by Pool & Spa News as America's #1 pool builder for five years running. For more on Blue Haven products and services, visit bluehaven.com or call (866) 809-7665.

Give Your Property A Makeover

Are you tired of the same old scenery? Are you looking to give your property a facelift? Well, it is possible to increase the value of your home while beautifying your property.

Landscape design and construction are great ways to significantly raise the value of your home, and there are many ways to do this. Retaining walls are a start. They are long lasting blocks as well as natural stonewalls that can add dimension to your property by creating "levels." They can be built to efficiently retain a small or large amount of earth. Also, they come in a variety of colors, textures, shapes and sizes.

Patios also are a great way to raise the value of your home. There are so many high quality pavers on the market that can transform a boring concrete area into a beautifully sculptured pattern, using cobblestone, regular bricks or with one of the hundreds of colors or shapes that brick pavers now come in. From flat to textured varieties, any pattern can be created to suit your taste.

Landscape design is a client favorite. Mother Nature has graced us with thousands of evergreen and deciduous plants, shrubs, trees, annuals and perennials. Installing them in a well-thought out plan will not only make you the envy of your neighbors but will ensure a breathtaking approach to looking out your windows each morning.

Water features are very exciting when it comes to beautifying your property. Waterfalls can be built to cascade peacefully into a (in-ground) pool. Koi Ponds can create a tranquil area to relax that both you and your children will love. With so many shapes of rocks and stones, this can be built to suit your every need.

All these projects can undoubtedly increase all your future home appraisals. Since homeowners do not pay tax on a capital improvement, even New York State is keeping your best interest in mind.

Make sure you take the time to interview your potential contractor. Have the contractor educate you on the scope of work that he or she is proposing. Ask about installation procedures. Contractors have different methods of installation. As long as the method is executed properly, you, the customer, should feel reassured the materials are installed properly. Compare your proposals. Note what each contractor has to offer. Remember, price and quality are very important. If you get a much lower price than the standard competitive rates, then most likely it's too good to be true. Keep in mind that you get what you pay for. Ask your contractor if he or she plans on completing the work himself or if he plans on subcontracting the work. Proper licensing and insurance is essential for all the parties involved. Select your contractor based on these guidelines. You should feel confident you are receiving quality materials and workmanship.

Herman Bros. Landscape Contracting Corp. not only builds fine landscapes, they build relationships. Customers have comfort in selecting Herman Bros. – that's their guarantee. For more information, call 631-360-2939 or email hermanbroscorp@aol.com.

Why Title Insurance?

Discussions of title insurance aren't your typical dinner conversation, and many a homebuyer has balked at the need to have yet another fee added to his or her closing costs. But any homeowner who has encountered an undiscovered and uninsured title problem will tell you that full disclosure is everything when it comes to knowing the history and any issues related to the title of a piece of property.

A forgery 50 years ago; a deed executed under duress; an error by someone in the county clerk's office; a misapplied tax payment: these are a few of the hidden "title defects" that could actually cause you to lose your property. Even if that worst case scenario doesn't happen, title problems could make it impossible for you to sell or even give the property away. These problems could also result in lengthy, costly court battles.

"Title defects" could make it possible to even give the property away.

A title insurance policy is your best protection against potential defects that could remain hidden – despite the most thorough search of the public records. And it's always best to use a reputable firm with a long track record, like First American Title Insurance Company. For a one-time premium, First American agrees to reimburse homeowners for loss suffered due to defects that existed prior to the issue date of your policy, up to the amount of the policy.

Through its National Commercial Services Division, First American is able to settle and insure complex multi-property and multi-state commercial, retail, office, multi-family, hotel and industrial real estate transactions. A driving force behind the company's success is its in-depth knowledge of the marketplace combined with the dedication and experience of its talented team of professionals.

Today, First American Title Insurance Company of New York has offices in Midtown Manhattan, Long Island, Westchester County and Upstate New York. It has been servicing Suffolk County with offices in Riverhead for more than thirty years. First American Title Insurance Company of New York is a wholly owned subsidiary of First American Title Insurance Company. First American Corporation (NYSE:FAF) – is a Fortune 500 Company with revenues of $8.5 billion in 2006 and more than 39,000 employees

The company traces its history back to 1889 when Orange County, California, a rural undeveloped area at the time, split off from the county of Los Angeles. Two firms opened to handle title matters in the brand-new county. Five years later, the two competitors merged into a single entity called Orange County Title Company, which was the immediate predecessor to today's First American Title Insurance Company, the largest subsidiary of the First American Corporation.

In 1924, it became one of the first abstract companies in California to qualify to issue policies of title insurance. In 1957, the board of directors authorized an expansion plan of the company, and by 1963 it had changed its name to First American and was operating in four states. The company had its initial public offering on the over-the-counter market in 1964. Two years later, First American was restructured into a general holding company, The First American Financial Corporation, which conducted its title operations through First American Title Insurance Company and a trust business through First American Trust Company. By 1982, First American Title served every region of the country.

Unclaimed Funds Waiting For You!

Have you ever moved and forgotten to get back a utility deposit? Or maybe you've quit a job and walked out without collecting your last paycheck. You may have left a trail of money behind and not realized it.

Over the years, New York State has collected about $8 billion in unclaimed funds and is actively seeking the rightful owners of this money. "The money belongs to New Yorkers," said State Comptroller Thomas DiNapoli. "We want to give it back."

Representatives of the New York State Department of Unclaimed Funds will be available at various statewide events, including the Hamptons Home and Garden Show held May 2-4, to determine if any of this unclaimed money belongs to attendees. Each year, this booth is easily one of the most popular at the Hamptons Home and Garden Show. And, if you can't make it there, you can search for yourself online at osc.state.ny.us by just typing in your name and city or by calling 800-221-9311.

There are also federal agencies that hold unclaimed funds, including IRS income tax refunds, the Bureau of Public Debt savings bonds, Social Security benefit checks, HUD mortgage refunds and more. Many people also don't realize that they're entitled to money that is owed to deceased relatives.

Though hard to believe, there are many ways that funds can be forgotten over the years, whether it is because of death, a name change after a marriage or divorce or an unreported change of address. The funds in question can include rent security checks, forgotten savings and checking accounts, uncashed checks and old trust funds. These funds average between $800 and $1,000, but can be worth much more.

Banks and other businesses are required by law to turn over unclaimed and abandoned funds to the state after a period of inactivity, usually between two and five years, and must first attempt to contact the owners of these funds. The State then holds and protects the funds at no charge until someone claims them.

But don't think the State just hands out cash to anyone who steps forward. Before you'll even be told the exact amount of money that's in any unclaimed account or fund, you need to provide proof that you're really the person to whom it's owed.

So stop by the booth at this year's Hamptons Home and Garden Show. You never know how much money might be waiting for you.

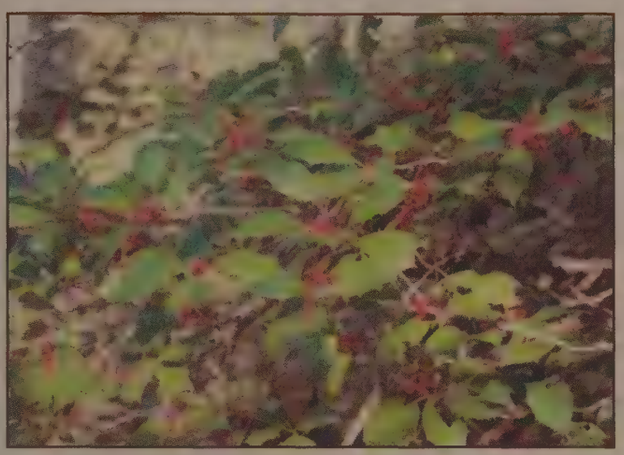
good reason. Their description alone will send you running to the nursery, but if you think about it there is probably an old one growing down the block. They describe this native as "a large, commanding shade tree with bold, heart shaped leaves in whorls. Flowers emerge in early summer and the profusion of bloom against the tower of greenery is stupendous." The flowers resemble small white orchids. Many of the book's other recommendations are equally valid and valuable, like Spirea douglassi, a native shrub that has a pink astilbe-like flower. A big bank of them is growing in a fresh water wetland north of East Hampton Airport – you've probably driven by and noticed it, but never knew what it was called. Or where to buy it.



So where can you find native plants? Because of re-vegetation requirements many things are in demand, but not readily available. Local grasses, bayberry, cedars and asters for old fields, or blueberries for oak woods are commonly propagated in nurseries, but you may have to special order that Catalpa. And it may be smaller than what you want to start with. The American holly is another native plant in high demand; large ones are difficult to locate and expensive when found. There are plenty of holly cultivars available that have a better form, glossy leaves, more berries and fewer insect issues, but they won't be accepted by the towns as a substitution for American holly and may not survive the vicissitudes of our weather unless pampered. Oaks are now in production and smaller calipers are easier to find. as are wonderful multi-stemmed red maples, the kind that grow in local swamps and have fantastic fall color.

It is worth the wait and the additional effort to locate native plant material. Most people find that they enjoy the lower maintenance costs. And wildlife attracted to the garden is not such an issue if the animals only stop and browse. In addition, native plants remind many of us of the natural landscapes we fell in love with around the East End.

What to do Right Now

Turn the irrigation on and watch the lawn grow, but keep kids and dogs off of it if you have used a pre-emergent other than corn gluten. If you need to do spot work on the lawn, cover the grass seed with a dark clean compost and it will practically spring up overnight if you set the irrigation for 15 minutes in the morning and 15 minutes in the evening. Once the grass is up 3" you can set the timer back to a more regular weekly schedule.

Bissett Nursery supplies the East End nurseries and landscape companies with all kinds of plant material, but when it comes to jobs that specify native plants they find that there are several trees and shrubs in high demand. However, of the 40 or 50 that might be listed by the East End town environmental departments as suitable, only a handful have been in production for more than a decade, so larger sizes and more varieties have been slow to come on the market and meet demand.

According to a spokesperson at Bissett, Juniper virginiana or eastern red cedar, bayberry, high and low blueberries, Amelanchiers or shadblow, bear berry and Aronia are the most asked for plants when it comes to revegetation projects. But not everyone sees native plants as beautiful. Often they're not as manicured as hybridized nursery stock, particularly American hollies which can grow in a less uniform way. But the one native shrub everyone loves is Mountain laurel, Kalmia latifolia.

If you've got $5,000 spend $5,000, if you have $1 million buy a $1 million painting.

But don't speculate on an artist, Borghi advises. It isn't worth it. You may think you are discovering the next great, unknown artist, but you probably aren't. If you like the work and don't mind spending the money, then fine. But if it doesn't appreciate, don't get mad. A general rule to remember – to ensure the value of your art will increase buy only work by known artists.

There are also a few fallacies you may want to keep in mind. The first one is that bigger is always better. Yes, some oversized paintings sell for millions upon millions, but they are also quality pieces. As with anything, quality is key.

The second thing to remember is that dead artists don't mean big bucks. According to Borghi, speculating on the death of an artist and purchasing their work while alive, does not guarantee you a fortune once they pass away. The reason that so many works by dead artists are so valuable is because they have proven their resonance generation after generation. Collecting art isn't exactly like collecting antiques. Age doesn't play as much of a factor in price. It is track record that counts. Many pieces have auction records, which will explain how their prices have appreciated over the years. This can give you information about an exact piece or a general idea of the value of an individual artist.

Also, provenance is a must for anything. You should have authenticated documentation that tracks how a piece of art got from the artist's hands to yours. It is the only bonafide way to prove the piece is original. If you are buying the piece from the artist, have them write a bill of sale including the date, price, title of the artwork and their signature.

If you follow these tips and keep tabs on the art world, you can really make your investments grow. But overall, you really need to enjoy art for its beauty.

It's the Art Deco pieces that make up some of the more special items in Benchmark's inventory. Michael favors the bracelets, particularly really over-the-top ones. "It was a time when people had money, and they were spending it. You see some with hand-carved colored stones called a fruit salad style, with leaf-like or fruit motif, or huge onyx stones laid into the bracelet." Admittedly, these pieces are one-of-a-kind and of their era. Those from the 20s and earlier were usually made by hand, so in a sense they are all unique. It wasn't until after World War II that the craftsmanship started to ebb away. Michael says that automation replaced it – for the most part. "Previous to that, a bench jeweler would sit down and work on a piece for months." It's a world he, and his family, can clearly appreciate and enjoy.

zontal slats which give it an Asian and contemporary look. Fences are also made using aluminum in a style that looks like traditional wrought iron, and are relatively low maintenance. In general, there are countless options, though the purpose of the fence and the overall plan for the desired look and style of the garden plus budget range will make a choice easier to come by.

Now is the time to fly into action about the outdoors, so don't hesitate to get the fences and gates in order (and on order) for the season.

YOUR WEEKLY GUIDE TO FUN IN THE HAMPTONS

Bebe Neuwirth Promises Intimate Experience at WHBPAC

Though most people might know her best as the restrained and unemotional Dr. Lilith Sternin, the wife – and later ex-wife – of Dr. Frasier Crane on "Cheers" and "Frasier," anyone who knows anything about theater knows that Broadway is where Bebe Neuwirth has received most of her accolades.

And fans, expecting, perhaps, an extension of her Broadway career, might be surprised when Neuwirth comes to the Westhampton Beach Perfomring Arts Center on Sunday, April 27, she says. Calling it an "intimate experience," Neuwirth says while she will be singing on stage, she will be supported solely by Scott Cady on piano and the show's repertoire will consist of a wide range of songs, from Broadway to Tom Waits, from the well known to the obscure. "These songs are not things I do generally," she said. "But they are very, very beautiful songs that tell beautiful stories. They're all very meaningful to me. They certainly describe moments of my own life."

But it's not all about herself, says Neuwirth, who wants the audience to walk away with its own sense of meaning for each song. "I'd like to have audience [members] come up with their own interpretation of a piece and how it relates to them," she said. "We're performing the show, but the people in the audience are a part of that show."

Neuwirth, who grew up in Princeton, N.J., took to the stage at an early age as a dancer. "I was always a performer," she said. "I've always felt much more comfortable onstage. I'm not an exhibitionist or anything. I'm just kind of shy. It's easier to hide onstage as another character. I always felt a bit uncomfortable in social situations."

She made her Broadway debut in 1980, in the role of Sheila in A Chorus Line. She also was featured in revivals of Little Me, Damn Yankees and Sweet Charity, receiving for the latter a Tony Award for Best Featured Actress in a Musical.

In the role of Velma Kelly, Neuwirth also garnered a Tony, as well as a Drama Desk Award as Best Lead Actress in a Musical, for her work in the 1996 revival of Chicago. She rejoined the cast of Chicago in 2007, this time taking on the role of Roxie Hart.

Considering her vast array of roles, Neuwirth says no one stands out more than the others. "I love them all while working on them," she said, "because you have to. Otherwise, you're going to do a lousy show." She said she just feels lucky to have been able to work with "geniuses" such as Bob Fosse, Michael Bennett and Gwen Verdon during her career.

Neuwirth says that as an artist there are often personal reasons for taking on a particular role. "It might change your life personally, or teach you something," she said. "Artists, through their work, their minds expand and their hearts expand." A good example of this, she says, is when she took on the role of Roxie in Chicago, after she had hip replacement surgery. "I was at a different place in life. I had been very successful and was lucky that I was able to dance again. Somehow, in very subtle ways, it was like what happens to Roxie, who gets a second chance at fulfilling the dreams of her life."

Offstage, she has numerous screen credits as well, aside from her role as Lilith (for which she won two Emmys), including the movies Tadpole, Say Anything, Celebrity and How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days. Her roles have been varied, as she has avoided playing another Lilith. "After 'Cheers,' I turned down a lot of work because I was trying to avoid being stereotyped into a certain type of character," she said.

But, as a self-described "theater rat," the stage is Neuwirth's first love. "I love being in theaters," she said. "I love the old theater feel, the smell, the vibe. It's a communal experience, a visceral experience. Theater is live, muscular; it has energy. It's the most natural thing."

She added, "Theater is the modern day version of when we were first in tribes, gathering together to tell stories. Theater is a natural extension of that. Then it might have been, 'Don't eat plant,' or 'Good hunting to north,' but it's developed into story and song."

Neuwirth's most recent project is an indie film called Adopt a Sailor, written and directed by Charles Evered, about a couple who inadvertently adopt a sailor during Fleet Week. It should be making the festival rounds this summer.

To purchase tickets to her show in Westhampton Beach, visit whbpac.org or call 631-288-1500. Tickets cost $65, $80 or $95.

Flick ★ Picks Ian Stark

Long Island native and rom-com innovator Judd Apatow is basically a lock these days to score with anything his name is attached to. After proving that The 40-Year-Old Virgin was no fluke with the even sweeter and more dead-on Knocked Up, it's now a race to see if he can fail. Mr. A...so far, so good.

His latest production, Forgetting Sarah Marshall (directed by Nick Stoller, scripted by Jason Segel), reprises his trademark formula of bawdy sexual humor and undeniable romantic sensitivity. Naturally, the usual crowd of producer Apatow actors (Jonah Hill, Paul Rudd) are in the film, a crew who at this point are not only valued, but anticipated, and this time Segel gets the starring nod as Peter Bretter, a fleshy and sensitive slacker-type who is completely in love with his girlfriend, film impetus Sarah Marshall (Kristen Bell, "Veronica Mars"). She's a TV star, and he's okay with it all, standing in the background and holding her pocketbook as she basks in her stardom. Don't worry about this obvious spoiler; she breaks it off with him to go hang with someone more famous, the egocentric rock star Aldous Snow (Russell Brand, Penelope).

The mushy Peter ends up in a broken-hearted nightmare, as the face of the person he can't get over is plastered everywhere. He tries to move on, but any attempted romantic rendezvous proves too painful, resulting in some very unsexy, but funny, blubbering. His last resort turns out to be a resort indeed, as he jaunts off to Hawaii to heal. But this time, his ex doesn't glare at him from the television screen or city advertisement, rather she comes in person as he just happens to pick the same hotel Sarah and her hairy new beau have selected for their getaway vacation.

Forgetting Sarah Marshall

Hope is on the horizon, as expected, for the resort's desk clerk Rachael (Mila Kunis, "That '70s Show") happens to be stinging from a recent break-up herself, and ends up a handy – and attractive – emotional friend that might just turn out be the spark that gets Peter back in the game.

It's always a delight, and sadly refreshing, to see a cast of characters so well throughout. You expect to hate Aldous, but the more he mouths off, the more you realize he's just playing the cards he was dealt. Bell's Marshall, who the movie also uses as a vehicle to spear lousy TV cop shows, would seem to be the bad guy for what she's done to Peter, but before long you realize she's not a louse just because she felt like moving on. Kunis has no choice in her role; she has to be beautiful and down-to-earth enough to prove a better choice than Sarah, yet she is imbued with the right energy of someone who has learned her personal perfection through trial and error.

Segel also does a great job as the sad sack with a heart of near-gold who deserves true love, moping and boo-hooing yet maintaining some manliness. However, he's earned a very special prize here for guts, which leads to a warning that must be noted – he shows everything. The full and flabby monty. Regardless of the wit and observational gold this film offers, if you can't handle blatant full-frontal male nudity, do not come to see it because you will get an introduction to the actor's lower half usually reserved for urologists. It's not gratuitous, but in fact a purposefully placed device that reveals Peter's vulnerability. Nonetheless, even those who won't be coming to see the picture have to admire the man's courage to let it all hang out for theatre-goers, DVD buyers and web surfers, who will trade the bared naughty bits online for years to come.

Ian Stark is a frequent TV and radio commentator on the film industry. He is widely published on film and other arts/culture topics.

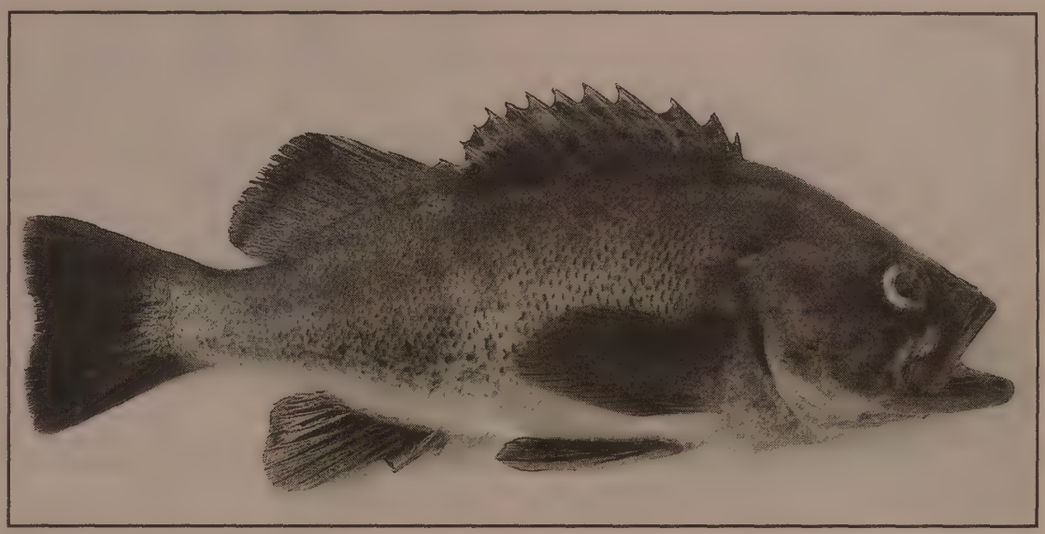
Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

With the change of weather and warmer temperatures heading our way, small fishing boats are moving out to sea within a few miles of shore. Gill-netting, a method of catching fish is employed by fishermen using large nets and setting them in the water. They're normally left overnight, weighted down with buoys and weights to retrieve the fish in local waters. According to Greg at Cor-J seafood in Hampton Bays we should expect skate and sea bass at East End seafood shops now. Weakfish, I am told, may also find their way into the nets. How fortunate we are to be so close to the source.

I love all manner of fish and shellfish. We've been eating lots of flounder, fluke and cod. We eat lots of salmon through the year too but in another month or so we will have wild salmon from the Pacific Coast, and that is a whole other story. I'm excited about cooking sea bass, a personal favorite that I look forward to preparing Asian style. Skate is an underappreciated fish, but its delicate white flesh makes a delicious saute in brown butter. It's only the meaty wings of skate that are marketed.

The most important thing with fish is to choose whatever is seasonal and freshest in the market. In this way fish could also prove to be economical, a major concern with fish today.



SEA BASS CHINESE STYLE

This is a traditional fish preparation in many Chinese home kitchens.

Serves 2-3

1 1/2 -2 pound sea bass, gutted and cleaned with head and tail left on
Coarse salt and freshly ground pepper
6 tablespoons peanut or canola oil
One-inch knob of ginger, peeled and sliced into matchsticks
1-2 tablespoons soy sauce
2 scallions, trimmed, rinsed and sliced on the diagonal

1. Have fishmonger clean fish as above. Rinse fish and dry well with paper towels.

2. Pour enough water in a wok or deep skillet with cover to poach the fish. Bring to a boil, put in the fish and reduce heat to a brisk simmer. Cover the wok or skillet with a tight fitting lid. Poach fish for 8-10 minutes. Test with chopstick for doneness.

3. While the fish is poaching, heat oil and ginger to crisp the ginger. Keep warm.

4. When fish is done, carefully remove from wok with a large flat spatula and transfer to a platter. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and lace with soy sauce. Pour the sizzling ginger/oil over the fish. Garnish with scallions and serve.

BRAISED SKATE WITH MUSHROOMS

Have your fishmonger prepare the skate into two filets by removing the blade sandwiched in the wing. The wing is the only edible part of the fish.

Serves 2

2 boneless, skinless skate wings, about 1 pound
Flour

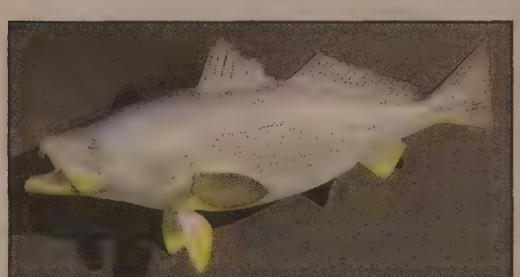
1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
2-3 shallots, finely chopped
1/3 pound shitake mushrooms, rinsed, dried and sliced thin
2-3 teaspoons fresh thyme leaves
2/3 cup dry white wine
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon fresh lemon juice
Fresh thyme sprigs for garnish, optional

1. Rinse skate wings, and with a paring knife, cut slits into membrane side to prevent from curling while cooking. Pat dry with paper towels and dredge in flour.

2. Heat oil in a non-stick skillet large enough to hold the filets in one layer. Put in the shallots and, using a wooden spatula, saute quickly over low heat until translucent, about 2-3 minutes. Put in 2 tablespoons butter and when foam subsides and butter browns slightly, add the fish and saute until golden brown, about 3 minutes per side. Meanwhile warm two dinner plates. Handle the fish carefully as you transfer the fillets to the plates so they don't break apart. Season fish with salt and pepper to taste.



3. Put the mushrooms in the same skillet the fish cooked in and increase heat to medium-high, stirring constantly for 3-4 minutes. Season with salt, pepper and thyme and stir to mix. Add the wine and bring to the edge of a boil, scraping the bottom to deglaze pan juices and toss to coat with the mushrooms. Spoon over the fish.

4. Stir remaining tablespoon butter into the liquid over medium high heat. When the sauce thickens slightly pour the juices over the mushrooms. Toss a little lemon juice over everything, garnish with thyme sprigs, if desired, and serve at once.

WEAKFISH MEUNIERE

This classic preparation may be served with or without the slivered almonds.

Serves 4

2 large weakfish fillets, about 1 1/2 pounds
Milk to coat
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
4 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
4 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf Italian parsley
1/4 cup slivered almonds, lightly toasted (optional)

1. Rinse fillets and place in a shallow dish with milk to barely cover.

2. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a large non-stick skillet until hot. Meanwhile coat the fish with flour on both sides and season with salt and pepper. Saute one fillet at a time (do not crowd the pan) until well-browned, about 3 minutes on each side. Add butter as needed to continue cooking. Transfer fillets to a platter, one layer deep, as they are done.

3. Stir lemon juice and parsley into the brown butter pan drippings and stir to mix over medium heat. Pour sauce over the fillets and top with slivered almonds. Serve at once.

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

Guild Hall Member's Show

First, an apology. I will not be commenting on both member's shows, only the works of artists whose last names are M-Z. Another apology. I am bound to miss some striking work,and it's understandable if the artists are annoyed. They should be. The contributors should also be miffed that some comments are rather brief, merely a "mention." This, in no way, reflects on the works' quality. Granted, this is no way to start a serious critique. But establishing a context is the first rule of journalism.

It's hard not to notice the award winners and not to question the judge's selections. Everybody does it. Some winners are well-deserved, it seems, while others may not be. Which address the diverse criteria that people use to choose what's best. Most pieces that this critic particularly liked feature elements of texture and "physicality," a favorite aesthetic aspect applied to films by Spike Lee in The Whitney Biennial Art Commentary. Goran Petmil's "Best Mixed Media" is a good example, its scraps of jeans and other material creating an arresting design. Another mixed media work by Julie Small-Gamby recalls an ancient terrain not so unlike Mr. Petmil's. Linda Stein's "Formative Knights" presents other kinds of material, like bronze, ceramic and metal, evoking a diferent mood altogether.

Darius Yektai Sculpture

Pamela Topham's tapestry is a third view of texture, one that is representational, not abstract, like the two aforementioned works. "Harbor Music" is an appropriate title, considering Ms. Topham's mastery over rhythm and line. Christa Maiwald's embroidery is similarly felt, although it's one of the few political pieces in the show. Several works emphasize texture as well; perhaps "painterly" would be a better word to describe their technique and effect. For example, Diana Plitt's "Baker Boys" is a figurative evocation of material as are Ann Raymond's monotype "Change" and Roseann Schwab's "Cross Roads" ("Best Work on Paper"). John Ross' "Venetian Windows" is another outstanding example. Although two-dimensional, it seems authentic enough to imagine we are entering its portals.

Renate Pfleiderer's photograph ("Honorable Mention") gives a strong sense of texture, too, the image itself containing diverse material objects, including a bicycle and metal shape on the wall. Darius Yektai's sculpture ("Best Sculpture") is a final example of texture, its abstract figure creating both a somewhat familiar yet frightening object.

The Member's Exhibition (M-Z) will be on view at East Hampton's Guild Hall until April 26.

Honoring the Artist: Amy Zerner

We've all heard of the term "Renaissance Man." Cover artist Amy Zerner is a true "Renaissance Woman." If we think about it for a bit longer, however, we can even say she's a woman of all ages, not just the Renaissance.

Q: You've been quite busy this last year. In fact, you and Monte are always busy.

A: Yes. We just wrote 26 books for Barnes and Nobel. I remember we visualized that we would have our books on a shelf in a book store. Then we forgot about it for several years.

Q: I've seen the jackets online – they are really exquisite. That's really what you're known for on the East End. How do you work with clients when you make one of your jackets?

A: They're custom-made, so I interview people to learn about their life, what their colors are.

Q: You've said colors are really important; they can give a sense of calmness or energy. Tell me what colors Barack and Hillary should be wearing?

A: Barack wore a green tie at the last debate. That gave him a sense of calm. Hillary should wear more yellow. It's a power color.

Q: What is it about creating clothes that has meaning for you? They are really art forms.

A: I like when a jacket I make meets the person who is meant to wear it. I also believe that jackets should be on a person's body. Art just hanging on a wall is a thing of the past. You know Monte wears my jackets, too. I say, "I married a billboard."

Q: Speaking of your husband, you have a really close relationship. You have been working together every waking hour of the day. Are you two the same or different as far as abilities?

A: Monte has a feminine side; he's very intuitive. But he's also very scientific. I have a masculine side. For example, I like to involve myself in the business aspect, making presentations, seeing how far I can take things.

Q: How did the two of you meet?

A: At the filming of a porno movie. Really. He was a musician in the band that was playing for the movie. I just went to watch. But everybody was clothed. That was in 1974. We've been together for 33 years. It gets better all the time.

Q: Considering that you first met at a porno event, it's funny that now your life evolves around spirituality. For example, your books deal with the power of affirmation. Meaning what?

A: Meaning first that we're all connected. We all want the same things. We can all make a difference. It sounds corny. Find a way to meditate that's right for you.

Q: In a nutshell, what would you say?

A: Buddha said, " All that we are is the result of what we have thought."

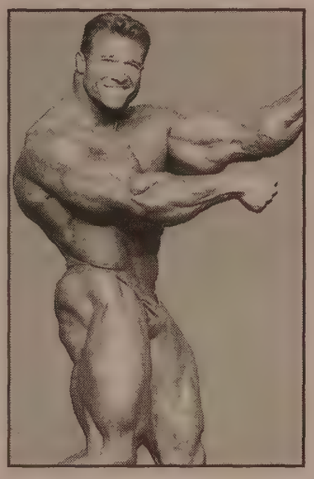
THE Y FACTOR with Christian McLean

Beach Body

Memorial Day Weekend is a month away – just thought you should know that. Actually, that's not all; I thought I'd also remind you that you've got four weeks to abandon that silly putty physique and get your beach body back. Everyone always talks about working on their beach muscles, but in all honestly, you need more than just curls, crunches and pushups to be fit.

Like any wellness plan – notice I didn't say diet – you've got to take a good look at yourself, outside and in. Health doesn't come from only pumping iron or drowning in weight-loss shakes – it is a total reconfiguration of your eating habits and exercise routine. Before you go any further, pour yourself a large glass of water and drink it down. Get used to this practice because you should start consuming a lot of water. A daily minimum calls for eight 8 oz. glasses a day, but if you're going to be sweating (and you will be) you'll need a lot more. Try to drink at least 3/4 of a gallon a day. It sounds like a lot, but you'll feel better and fuller, your muscles will work at a higher rate, and there's less chance of getting headaches. First thing you do in the morning, pour yourself a large glass of water – try to drink two if you can – then go about your normal daily routine.

As for eating, cut out the crap, count the calories and control the portions. I know Lent is long over, but give up the candy, deep fried food, and massive portions of pasta. Fill up on low-density foods, like salad, fruits and vegetables, before you eat your main course. Think before you eat and keep a diary of what you have consumed. If you have to write it down, you'll think twice about eating it.



Calories are important because they are the fuel that keeps your body going. Starving yourself cuts out the calories and therefore cuts out all your energy. The trick is to consume the proper amount of calories to give you enough fuel to get you through the day. For example, I am supposed to consume 2,000 calories a day to maintain my weight. If I want to lose weight, then I need to either consume less calories or burn more (or both). Introducing a cardiovascular routine is the easiest way to increase the amount of calories you use on a daily basis. If I consume 2,000 calories and burn 300 using the elliptical machine, my body will search for calories elsewhere in the body. That elsewhere happens to be fat cells. If you stick to this over time, the body consistently loses 300 calories of fat a day, which means a slimmer, trimmer you. Cardio exercise (walking, running, elliptical, biking, swimming, jazzercise) also helps to tone your body, but for a more pronounced muscular look you're gonna have to hit the weights. For those looking to impress the ladies, arms, chest and stomach muscles are always on the top of the list of what to work on and while those do need attention, don't neglect the complementary muscles on your body – in other words, your upper and lower back, shoulders and legs.

According to Steve Zim trainer and author of 6 Weeks to a Hollywood Body the trick to getting ripped in no time is drop sets. Find a weight that you can do six flawless repetitions of and then once your form begins to waver, lower the weight by five to ten pounds until you reach a weight of which you can do 20 repetitions. If you choose to use free weights, use a spotter because by the end of each set your muscles are going to be shot. If you'd prefer longer, leaner muscles, yoga is a great way to strengthen the body and get your spiritual side in balance before the hectic nature of summer starts throwing everything out of whack.

That's it in a nutshell. So, pry your body off the couch, rousing it from winter hibernation and get the blood pumping. You should really take care of your body all year round, but if you've been slacking a little, now's the chance for a jumpstart. Drink your water, take your vitamins, eat plenty of fruits and veggies, and get going. It's time you step out of that shadow of your former self and step into the sunlight.

Raving Beauty By Janet Flora

Wash or Wear Hair

How often you wash your hair during a week probably depends on whether it's thick or thin, the time of year, and the lifestyle you lead. But if you sometimes wonder if you should wash – or simply wear – John DiGioia, key hairstylist on "Late Show with David Letterman," has some expert advice. "If your hair tends to be dry," he said, "avoid frequent washings and don't assume instant conditioner (the kind you put on after washing and rinse out) is the answer – that is only useful for detangling."

To really condition your hair, the best strategy is an overnight (or several hour long) treatment. DiGioia suggests putting freshly washed hair in a ponytail and saturating the hair from mid-shaft to the ends with conditioner. Leave the hair closest to the root free from product to avoid making the hair limp. After applying the conditioner, use a plastic treatment cap, which is a thin version of a shower cap sold at beauty supply stores or specialty shops like Ricky's. By using the plastic cap, you lock in natural heat from the scalp that helps the product penetrate the hair shaft. If you can't, or don't want to sleep with the product on your hair, just leaving it on for even one hour will make a difference.

DiGioia is not partial to any particular conditioner, but rather believes it's the amount of time the product remains on the hair that produces results. If your hair is very dry or over-processed, he suggests mixing cap of extra virgin olive oil into regular conditioner. You can give your hair a light shampoo to remove any excess when rinsing out this mixture.

If your scalp tends to get oily but the ends of your hair are dry, you can avoid frequent washings by using baby powder or dry shampoo. DiGioia said, "Baby powder works great for absorbing some of the oil from the scalp and will make the hair look clean." He cautions, however, not to pour the product directly onto the hair, but instead sprinkle the powder on a brush then, concentrating on the roots first, brush through the hair while your head is turned upside down to eliminate any excess powder.

If you prefer not to use loose powder you can buy spray-on dry shampoo, which is basically powder in a can, but can be easier to use. Pssssst is a spray-on dry shampoo that has been around for decades. Pssssst is sold in only one color, and like baby powder, it's white. SG, which stands for Salon Grafix is a spray-on dry shampoo available in shades for blondes, brunettes, redheads and those with silver and black hair, and is available in most chain drugstores. The advantage to using a spray-on dry shampoo is that there is more control when using the product, it can be sprayed right on the root of the hair close to the scalp much like you would use a root lift or a mousse. Many trendy salons like Bumble and Bumble sell their own version of dry shampoo, which costs almost three times as much as SG, Pssssst, or baby powder.

For those who get sweaty from a daily workout and feel they need to wash each day, DiGioia suggests rinsing your hair without shampoo and using just a bit of instant conditioner, this he says, "will freshen your hair and keep it from getting too dry."

Whether you choose to wash or wear, DiGioia says "to really keep hair in the best possible condition it needs to be trimmed every six to eight weeks."

Letters

e-mail Dan at askdan@danspapers.com

WE'RE ALL IN THIS TOGETHER

Dear Dan,

After placing a call to the village Highway Department to ask when leaves could be put out for pick-up, I proceeded to do so, with permission. A wee later, I receive the following letter:

Dear Ms. Field,

I bought my property and built a house to enjoy the beautiful surroundings of the country area.

I would like to thank you for trying to make the appearance of the area so presentable. When I have a guest over this weekend, I am going to tell them how energetic you are (or stupid).

You put some leaves out off your property about two weeks ago, which made the roadway horrid. Then when the town picked up the debris you had out, it was less than twenty-four hours and you put more out to make the road look like a dump again. I pay a local contractor to remove my debris so I can enjoy the clean atmosphere out here.

I know now the intelligence level of a Local Yokel.

Please do not talk about us people who move out here and walk over the locals because number one the locals don't know how lucky they were to live in an area they have out here.

Sincerely,
Just a city idiot

Since you lack the courage to put your signature at the end of your letter, my response will be to "Just a city idiot."

Dear Just a City Idiot,

First of all, as you may or may not know, the Village of Sag Harbor (not the town as you referred to it) provides this wonderful service paid for through our village taxes. If you do not wish to avail yourself of this service and instead prefer to "pay a local contractor to remove debris," that is your prerogative. One's "intelligence level" is not measured by whether or not one uses a service that is provided, however, if it were an accurate measuring tool, wouldn't that then make you the "stupid" one?

As for your paranoid statement, "please do not talk about us people," you paint everyone with the same brush. I happen to have a wonderful family from the city as neighbors.

As for your "lucky" to live here statement, let me clear that up for you. There was nothing "lucky" about it. My parents came here through Ellis Island in hopes of a better life. Instead they stepped into the Great Depression. They sacrificed and struggled and did without the most basic necessities in life such as electricity, running water, heat, food, job and no automobile. It was through their unending determination of the human spirit to survive that made it possible. Luck had nothing to do with it. There was nothing "lucky" about it, just years and years of endless hard work and sacrifice. The dues have been paid.

In this time of war, sagging economy, loss of thousands of jobs, skyrocketing energy prices, I find it very sad that you find a pile of leaves on the side of the road as something to be concerned about.

Your letter to me suggests that you are an angry person. Might I suggest a little relaxation technique...raking? You might enjoy the "country area" even more. Speaking of raking, I must get back to mine. Round three coming up!

Peace.

Way to go Yolanda! – DR

NO LAUGHING MATTER

Dear Dan,

The old and evil cruel ways still exist in Sag Harbor.

It's unbelievable but it is true. At Spring Farm the horrible cruelty to ducks and pheasants has been going on for far too long and it's time to put a stop to this barbaric way of treating birds. This is no hunt and certainly no sport. I am tired of rescuing these poor birds with their bodies riddled with bullets. Many of them drag themselves all the way to my property too weak and wounded to be able to fly. Many with led poison in their bodies. They have all had one of their back toes cut of. All of them escapees from Spring Farm. It is high time to stop these heartless and cruel owners from running this kind of business. If they must have a shoot they can do this with clay pigeons.

Spring Farm is more like a concentration camp. It's riddled with wounded and dead birds all over the area. It's dirty and littered with garbage and plastic and here they raise these poor birds from eggs. No living thing should have to live like this. The place is also a very dangerous traffic hazard, as one constantly has to swerve for the poor hurt birds in the road. I thank God that most of these old cruel ways are gone and more of them are disappearing every day as people just won't put up with this kind of treatment of birds. The next one to be gone should be Spring Farm.

Shame on you!

THE SOUND THANKS YOU

Dear Dan,

I want to express my thanks to governor Paterson and all the people who work to save the Long Island Sound.

I cannot think of a better way to send my thanks then through your paper. So if you would be so kind as to print this.

Thanks for saving my life!
And the lives of all creatures big and small
That live in and around me!
Your friend for life!

The Long Island Sound
Thank you.
H. Frank, Sr.

Governor Paterson has saved us from the "evil" Governor Spitzer.

IN THE REVIEW

Dear Dan,

I just wanted to thank Dan Rattiner and Jim Marquardt for their insightful and kind review of my book "Take No Prisoners" in the March 28 issue of Dan's Papers, which you were kind enough to send me here in Atlanta.

I hope to be back in Bridgehampton in mid-May and look forward to reading the paper regularly then.

Please wish Dan the best of luck on his new book

Best Wishes...

Police Blotter

Refused

A man in East Hampton was pulled over after he was spotted driving on the wrong side of the road and then swerving onto the shoulder of the road. An officer noticed that the man's breath smelled like alcohol. He also had bloodshot and glassy eyes, his speech was slurred and he was unsteady on his feet. The man was then asked to perform some basic movements, which he could not do, and then was asked to breath into a breathalyzer. The man refused to take the breathalyzer and then was arrested for DWI. Maybe the next time around, instead of refusing a breathalyzer, he'll refuse to get behind the wheel.

Stolen X-Box

A man was arrested after he was accused of stealing an X-Box from a home in Southampton. If anybody has ever met a person who plays a lot of X-Box, you would understand that this man should go to jail for ten years for stealing such a precious, precious machine.

15-Year-Olds

In probably one of the most shocking reports of vandalism in Springs, two 15-year-old boys were arrested after they were connected to a group of heinous acts of vandalism, which included trashing homes, spray painting racial slurs on the sides of houses and stealing ATVs and mopeds. The boys have been charged with a full platter of criminal charges. Unfortunately for them, they will have to deal with more than just a time-out from their mom.

Inspection Sticker

A man in Southampton that runs an auto shop reported to police that somebody stole 18 inspection stickers from his shop.

Marijuana

A man in Sag Harbor was arrested after he was pulled over for a traffic light violation. The officer found the man to be driving without a license and then found marijuana on his person. Officers revealed that the man is not really a man, but a living towel.

Revenge

A man in East Hampton seeking out revenge was arrested after he stole two television sets and a microwave, and then poured sugar in the gas tank of a truck, which destroyed the engine. He was arrested for the acts and charged with being in a vengeful rage.

Fender Bender

A woman in East Hampton was pulling out of a parking lot when she dropped her purse and left her foot on the accelerator. She had a fender bender with two other cars that were parked. The woman is glad she has her purse because she is going to need it in order to pay for the damage.

One Mad Ex-Girlfriend

An ex-girlfriend of a man in Hampton Bays was arrested after she slapped him across the face and threw a brick at his vehicle, destroying his windshield. What everybody at the scene of the crime wanted to know was just what the heck did the ex-boyfriend do? It must have been something really, really juicy.

Classic Lines
Allow me to introduce myself. My name is BRENDA BARCLAY. I own and operate a landscape design/build firm which has been centered in the Hamptons for over 15 years. We specialize in providing truly creative solutions for your landscape.
We approach each project individually, helping you to create interesting and exciting places to play and entertain. In an effort to expand, we would like to offer you the opportunity to meet and create a design sketch of your property at no charge. Allow us to make your home everything you want it to be.
Specializing in innovative approaches to landscape design and estate management.
